PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1939

Rev. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth! Before Thee, who breakest the bow and cuttest the spear in sunder, we would be still and know that Thou art God. Establish Thy regnant presence in our hearts: for the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.

The times have laid great cares on our hearts. In the high noon of our responsibility we pray for light to know the truth, and for resolution to walk in it. We have prayed for plenty, and Thy hand has rewarded our toil with abundance. And yet our hearts are anxious, for our feet tread on trembling pathways. We seek for the way, that we may lead a stumbling world. We seek for brotherhood, that divinely given mercies may not be withheld from human need by human error. We pray for peace, that the might of nations may not violate the likeness of the Creator in the breast of the creature.

May Thy voice still the fears of womanhood, Thy hand defend the weakness of childhood, Thy judgments stay the grasp of oppression, Thy fingers smooth the brow of human anxiety, and Thy love bind all mankind in the gracious unity of the family of God.

All of this we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Security Act; and Whereas the legislature has given full consideration to a meritrating system which will effectively accomplish the purposes of the Social Security Act and the Unemployment Compensation Act now operative in the Territory with respect to unemployment; and now operative in the Territory with respect to unemployment; and Whereas at the rate of tax now imposed on employers in the Territory of Hawaii there will be accumulated by the end of 1939 an unemployment trust fund in Washington, D. C., in excess of $5,000,000, which fund is more than ample to satisfy the requirements under the unemployment compensation law of the Territory, rendering unnecessary further contributions at the rates presently imposed: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring). That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, respectfully memorialized to provide by appropriate legislation that the provisions of law contained in act 243 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1937, relating to the employers' merit-rating system as amended by enactment of this legislature shall become effective immediately without impairment of any of the credit or additional credit rights or allowances now provided in sections 902 to 910, inclusive, of said Social Security Act notwithstanding the provisions and conditions therein contained, to the end that employers in the Territory who qualify contained, to the end that employers in the Territory who qualify under the provisions of the merit-rating system established by the legislature may pay contributions at the reduced rates in accordance with said merit-rating system without incurring additional liability for contribution or tax under the Social Security Act or any other Federal law relating to the same subject; and be it

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution, together with a copy of the Unemployment Compensation Act of the Territory of Hawaii, as amended at this session of the legislature, be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States of America and also to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, and to the Social Security Board.

Assembly Joint Resolution 108

Joint resolution relating to the Citizenship Day ceremonies at Manitowoc, and to memorializing the Congress of the United States to designate a Citizenship Day for the purpose of observing the duties, rights, and privileges of citizenship

Whereas the proposal of Prof. R. J. Colbert, of the University of Wisconsin, for a public formal program to install persons who have

Wisconsin, for a public formal program to install persons who have reached the age of 21 during the past current year into the status of citizenship is meritorious, forward-looking, and timely; and Whereas the step from minority to majority, full-fledged citizenship, is so important not only to the particular individuals directly involved but to our State and the United States as well, that impressive, patriotic, and dignified installation ceremonies that would properly impress the important and serious duties and responsibilities, as well as the rights and privileges of full-fledged American citizenship, would bring results and benefits of practical and farreaching effect conducive to a more alert and loval Americanism: reaching effect conducive to a more alert and loyal Americanism; and

Whereas such ceremonies would stimulate a much-needed direct effective interest in government, especially in those about to be-come qualified, active voting stockholders in the all-important affairs of their own Government; and

Whereas such citizenship plan and program is the most valuable contribution to our national life ever proposed and the Nation's most essential educational need and has already received national attention and approval, and there is every indication that Citizenship Day will become a permanent national program, and the eyes of the entire country will be focused on Manitowoc and Wisconsin on May 21, 1939, for there on that day will be performed ceremonies and programs rendered for the purpose of observing the duties, rights, and privileges of citizenship and installing into citizenship those entitled thereto, such ceremonies and programs being the first of their kind in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring). That the legislature of this State wholeheartedly endorses said Manitowoo County Citizenship Day ceremonies and programs; be it further

Resolved, That the members of the Wisconsin State Legislature and all other State officials and the people of the State in general attend and participate in, so far as possible, the ceremonies and programs at Manitowoc, Wis., on May 21, 1939; be it further Resolved, That His Excellency the Governor of Wisconsin issue and publish an appropriate proclamation to the people of Wisconsin in the resolved of the State of the sin relative thereto; be it further

Resolved, That this legislature hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to select and designate a day to be spent in performing ceremonies and rendering programs for the purpose of observing the rights, privileges, and duties of citizenship and for the purpose of publicly and formally installing individuals entitled thereto to citizenship; and be it further

Resolved. That duly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the Governor of this State, the President of the United States, each House of Congress, and each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 2459. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code with respect to the tax on employers of eight or more, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

(Mr. George introduced Senate bill 2460, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 2461. A bill to amend section 212 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (Public, No. 414, 75th Cong., ch. 898, 1st sess.); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill relating to the present vocational education acts, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I also desire to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement explanatory of this amendment of our vocational education program.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Georgia, and, without objection, the statement referred to by him will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2460) relating to the development of vocational education in the several States and Territories was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The statement presented by Mr. George is as follows:

STATEMENT ON THE BILL (S. 2460) TO AMEND VOCATIONAL LAWS

Federal grants to the States for vocational education are now authorized to the extent of about $22,000,000 annually, mainly by the Smith-Hughes Act of 1917 and the George-Deen Act of 1936. Although there is no doubt that these grants are providing funds much needed by the States and are on the whole promoting very desirable forms of education, in recent years there has been criticism as to the manner in which the grants are administered.

When the George-Deen Act was passed, there was some discussion of the situation which had arisen in some States by which vocational trainees were being utilized by migratory industries as a source of unpaid labor. A provision was written into the George-Deen Act to meet this situation. On further study of the problem, however, it appears that there are other situations in addition to the so-called plant training programs in which there is likely to be exploitation of vocational trainees for private profit.

The question has also arisen as to whether there is not an excessive degree of Federal control over the administration of the grants for vocational education. The Smith-Hughes Act is the basic act providing the framework of administration and the basic act providing the framework of administration and the conditions under which the funds may be expended. It was enacted more than 20 years ago, at a time when public high schools were relatively little developed throughout the country and those which did exist were almost wholly academic in character. In order to bring about the rapid development of a system of vocational education, it doubtless seemed necessary at the time to include many specific provisions in the Smith-Hughes Act and to provide for a very large amount of Federal supervision over matters which are purely educational in character. purely educational in character.

It now seems desirable to reconsider the vocational statutes with It now seems desirable to reconsider the vocational statutes with respect both to their administrative provisions and to the safe-guards provided to protect vocational trainees against commercial and industrial exploitation. An amending bill is therefore being introduced for appropriate consideration. It is expected that public hearings on the bill will be scheduled at an early date.

The bill is strictly limited in scope and will not affect the amount of the authorized for appropriate them.

of funds authorized for appropriation, their distribution among the various fields of vocational education, or the present apportion-ment of the grants among the States, all of which remain unchanged.

Labor aspects of the program of vocational education would be safeguarded more adequately under the bill by rewriting section 6a of the George-Deen Act and by adding three new sections to that act.

Section 6a of the George-Deen Act now provides that any funds spection to of the George-Deen Act how provides that any funda-appropriated under the act which are expended for industrial plant training shall be expended only for "bona-fide vocational train-ing" and not as a device "to utilize the services of vocational trainees for private profit." The revised section 6a would extend the same provision to the Smith-Hughes grants and other educational grants and would also apply it to part-time training programs, which have been subject to much the same criticism as plant training.

The three new sections proposed for addition to the George-Deen Act appear at the end of the bill and are self-explanatory. They require the State boards for vocational education to designate and consult with advisory committees, to provide adequate safeguards against exploitation of vocational trainees and to con-nate and consult with advisory committees, to provide a maintees and to conform to minimum labor standards. Minimum labor standards to cover situations not already provided for by law would be established by the Secretary of Labor, on recommendation of a representative national committee. The United States Commissioner of Education in carrying on his functions would be required to consult with a general advisory committee.

In some cases, the difficulties encountered in connection with trade and industrial education appear to have been due to the fact that specialized trade training was provided for pupils too young to profit by it. The minimum age specified in the present laws is 14 years. This appears to be satisfactory for agricultural and home economics education, but too low for trade training since most of the trade and industrial occupations cannot be entered below age 18 even after 2 years of specialized training in the schools. The bill therefore amends the respective provisions of the Smith-Hughes and George-Deen Acts to provide a minimum age of 16 years for trade and industrial pupils.

of 16 years for trade and industrial pupils.

The bill provides for the decentralization of Federal control over vocational education standards through the revision of sections

8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of the Smith-Hughes Act. Section 8 of the Smith-Hughes Act contains the general provision requiring State plans for vocational education and specifying the requiring State plans for vocational education and specifying the list of items to be included in all plans. All of the content of these plans is now subject to Federal approval. In the proposed revision of section 8, the part of the plans subject to Federal review would be greatly reduced. The plans for the division of funds among the various fields, namely, agriculture, home economics, trades and industries, and distributive occupations, would still be subject to Federal expressed in conformity with the status nomics, trades and industries, and distributive occupations, would still be subject to Federal approval in conformity with the statutory provisions dividing the funds among the fields. The State boards would continue to be required to prepare additional plans on the other matters now specified and to file such additional plans with the Federal office, but the provisions of the additional plans on matters discretionary with the State boards, such as the methods of instruction, the equipment to be used, and the qualifications of teachers, would not be subject to Federal disapproval. Sections 9 through 12 of the Smith-Hughes Act cover details of the program in the various fields and specify duties of the State boards for vocational education. In connection with various matters discretionary with the State boards, Federal approval is now required some 10 times in these four sections. In the revision, it is proposed that these specific requirements of Federal approval over discretionary State action be removed, although the State boards would continue to be required to prepare plans on every one of the points now specified.

The existing degree of Federal control over vocational education violates the principle of State autonomy in educational metters. Moreover, a high degree of Federal control over a limited part of the total educational process for children and youth appears to have resulted in many cases in the establishment of separate and competing types of high-school programs, in which the vocational pupils become a class apart from other pupils in the high-school grades.

In a democracy based on the absence of class distinctions, it is of the greatest importance to maintain unity in the educational system. The dual type of school system maintained in some European countries, with one set of opportunities for young people who are to enter the professions and another for the working classes, must be avoided in this country if the purposes of American democracy are to be achieved.

Decentralization of control to the respective State boards for vocational education should result in greater adaptation of vocational education to local conditions and the improved integration of vocational education into the entire program of secondary education. The only satisfactory organization for schools in the United States is a unified educational program through which each pupil is offered opportunities best suited to his particular abilities. It is a part of the democratic American tradition that this can best be brought about under State and local control over education.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PRISON INDUSTRIES REORGANIZATION ADMINISTRATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2303) authorizing the continuance of the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, established by Executive Order No. 7194 of September 26, 1935, to June 30, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PAY TO CERTAIN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYEES-AMENDMENT

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 71) relating to pay to certain employees of the Government Printing Office for uncompensated leave earned during the fiscal year 1932, which was referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATORS COPELAND AND LEWIS

On motion by Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That on Monday, May 29, 1939, at 2 o'clock p. m., the legislative business of the Senate be suspended for the purpose of permitting memorial addresses to be delivered on the life, character, and public service of the Honorable ROYAL S. COPELAND, late a Senator from the State of New York, and the Honorable James Hamilton Lewis, late a Senator from the State of Illinois.

NAVAL CLOTHING FACTORY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a resolution (S. Res. 134) in which I suggested a study by some of the departments of the Government as to the feasibility of the Government itself manufacturing meat products.

The Senate and the country will be surprised to know that the Navy at the present time maintains a clothing factory. It is located at Brooklyn, N. Y. It was established in 1879, by giving the material out to sewers, and has been operating since. In 1927 the uniforms of the enlisted men were made by complete manufacture in the clothing factory.

The material for making all the clothing used in the Navy is purchased and manufactured at this factory. The value of the equipment of the plant is $73,267.30.

There are six officers attached to the naval clothing depot, Brooklyn, N. Y., where the Naval Clothing Factory is located, who have charge of provisions and clothing, as well as management of the factory.

The employees of the sewing room of the Naval Clothing Factory are 320 in number. They are all civilians taken on through the Labor Board under civil-service rules. No enlisted men are employed.

The output is valued at $1,770,659.04 a year-1933-which is absorbed in the price of the uniforms, including the expense of manufacture. The Government does not ultimately pay for the cost of manufacture. If the clothing was purchased by competitive bidding, the cost would be greater than in the factory, as was shown at the hearing in 1933 before the House Appropriations Committee.

The types of clothing manufactured are as follows: Blue undress jumpers, trousers, overcoats, white dress jumpers, and white undress jumpers. The material and sewing charges go into the price fixed to the enlisted men, except outfits on first enlistment, which are issued free of cost to the new

After a bluejacket has been given his original outfit of uniforms, on his first enlistment, he must pay for the uniforms which he is required to have thereafter, exactly the same as civilians purchasing any needed clothing. The bluejacket has no volition in this matter. Therefore the furnishing to the enlisted men of these uniforms at the lowest prices is in the nature of a trust of the Navy Department.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN MARKET FOR AMERICAN PRODUCERS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, supplementing the able address delivered yesterday by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] regarding the jeopardy to the domestic sugar situation. I submit a copy of a letter I have written to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace regarding the particular effect of this jeopardy in the beet-sugar areas of Michigan. I ask that a copy of the letter be printed in the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 19, 1939.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,

Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: When the Sugar Act became law in 1937, it was the result of months of consideration. So much time was spent on this legislation that there remained no doubt in the minds of the committees in charge of the bill as to the intent of the provisions. Since that time there has been much controversy, all of which has been due to the interpretations placed upon the provisions of the Sugar Act.

The administration of the Jones-Costigan Act proved fairly satisfactory to the industry as a whole. I acknowledged this at the hearings on the sugar bill in 1937. It was my understanding at the time that the new constructions are the sugar belief. the time that the new sugar legislation would continue the policies the time that the new sugar legislation would continue the policies of the administration substantially.

Recently marketing allotments have been made under section 205 of the Sugar Act. Under the law these allotments must be "fair, efficient, and equitable." It has always been my understanding that in order to provide orderly marketing these allotments should not disturb established practices of the trade within reasonable efficiency; therefore, I am very much concerned to learn that the effect of the marketing allotments in Michigan will be to require many of our companies to warehouse sugar made in 1938 until 1940. Because of the humid climate in the Great Lakes region, I understand that this abnormal extended period of warehousing will probably force the reprocessing of these sugars or cause them to be sold at a considerable discount.

housing will probably force the reprocessing of these sugars or cause them to be sold at a considerable discount.

I am also informed that many of our companies will not be permitted to market any of the new crop sugar in the fall of 1939 until 1940. This brings up a new financial problem for these companies who have been able to pay farmers from $5 to $5.50 per ton of beets as an initial payment in December, made possible by the selling of the new crop sugars for cash in the fall. In those cases where the company finds it necessary to borrow money to make the payments to growers, the sugar has been accepted as collateral, but the value of sugar which cannot be marketed in the current year raises the question from the standpoint of its acceptability as collateral for a loan at the bank.

As I look into the facts I find that the entire quota for the beetsugar area amounts to 29,284,470 bags of sugar. Effective January 1, 1939, the inventory of beet sugar held by the entire industry was 26,906,705 bags, which means that there were available at the first 26,906,705 bags, which means that there were available at the first of this year 2,377,765 bags of sugar less than the quota. It is normal that the old crop of sugar should be marketed by all companies at the earliest available opportunity and before any new-crop sugars are put on the market; therefore, to make the marketing allotments "fair, efficient, and equitable" to all companies, they should have been permitted to market all of the sugar produced in good faith during 1938 before the sugar to be produced in 1939 was made the subject of marketing allotments. made the subject of marketing allotments.

But I find an even more interesting situation. Among the largest multiple-plant companies of the United States are three in the vestern area which have received a 1939 marketing allotment of 15,294,111 bags, while these three companies had an effective inventory on January 1, 1939, of 12,775,960 bags, which means that they will be permitted to sell their entire inventory plus 2,518,151 bags of new-crop sugar. On the other hand, the remaining 22 companies have a combined marketing allotment of 13,990,359 bags, while their effective inventory was 14,130,745 bags. The net effect is that they will not be permitted to market their entire inventory or any new-crop sugars until 1940.

Bringing the results of the marketing allotments nearer home, I find that in the State of Michigan four of the companies will be forced to carry 1938 sugars into 1940 and will be permitted to market no new-crop sugars. The net effect of the marketing allotments on the industry in Michigan is that the combined marketing allotment is less than the January 1 inventory by 25,905 bags. Normally these companies would market in the fall of 1939, 756,509 bags of new-crop sugars if there were no marketing allotments. So the industry in Michigan is practically forced out of its own home market in the fall of the year, when Michigan-made sugar is always sold, and the demand will be supplied by other States while Michigan-made sugar is kept in the warehouse. It does not require business experience to see immediately what the effect upon our Michigan producers will be to completely upset their established practices and natural market during a period of the year when they have the most sugar available for sale. It is not possible that anyone will contend that Congress intended such a result from an act whose every purpose is to protect the welfare of those persons engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry.

The whole subject cannot be considered without some reference to returns from sales of sugar. Necessarily, if costly burdens are being created which must be paid for by the industry, then the net returns should cover these costs and compensate for them. But a review of the price of sugar presents an emerging nighting. Let But a review of the price of sugar presents an amazing picture. Let me present here the average retail price in the United States for the past 15 years:

1925	7.200
1926	6.900
1927	7.300
1928	7.100
1929	6, 600
1930	6.200
1931	5.700
1932	5. 100
1933	5.400
1934	5. 600
1935	5.700
1936	5. 600
1937	5. 643
1938	5.300

Average, first 3 months 1939, 5.100.

Average, inst 3 months 1939, 5.100.

The above list shows that the price paid for sugar by the consumer today is less than it has been at any time, excepting only in the year 1932. The President recognized that the price was too low for the maintenance of the domestic sugar industry when he asked Congress in 1934 to stabilize the sugar industry. During the regime under the Jones-Costigan Act the price remained fairly consistent, carying less than one-tenth of a cent for each of the 4 years. All official statements in 1937 approved of the price levels, and it was the understanding of Congress that these were to be maintained. Of course, it was understood and expressed by the President that the price of sugar would not be increased because of the dent that the price of sugar would not be increased because of the assessing of a tax on sugar. No one expected or intended that, in addition to absorbing the tax, the domestic sugar industry was to suffer an additional half-cent reduction in price. The consumers of the United States understood this and accepted this fact as fair and reasonable.

Nevertheless, we find now that not only is the production of sugar in the United States being restricted and reduced, but that the marketing of the sugar produced within the law and in good faith is made the subject of upsetting allotments which create new burdens which must also be paid out of the price of sugar.

Under the circumstances I submit that the domestic sugar industry has cause for compellat and research to self-form relief from

Under the circumstances I submit that the domestic sugar industry has cause for complaint and reason to ask for relief from the regulatory measures which are being put upon them under the discretionary powers authorized by the Sugar Act. But these powers were made discretionary in order to facilitate the administration of the act rather than to be used as a means for exerting a stifling control which jeopardizes the maintenance of the domestic sugar industry, with which the Secretary of Agriculture is charged specifically under the law.

In behalf of the growers of sugar beets and producers of sugar, who are citizens of the State of Michigan, I ask for a reconsideration of the policies now being enforced under the Sugar Act, with a view to such amelioration as will maintain the domestic sugar industry in the manner intended by Congress and provided for in the Sugar Act of 1937

Cordially and faithfully,

ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG.

Jones, who served as a first lieutenant, One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment United States Infantry, shall be entitled to apply for benefits of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended and supplemented, in the same manner as other officers and enlisted men of the United States Army who served during the World War and who were discharged under honorable conditions, and upon presentation of proper proof to receive such compensation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, under such regulations as he may prescribe, may provide for the sale to any aircraft operated by any foreign military or air attaché accredited to the United States of fuel, oil, equipment, and supplies, and for the furnishing to such aircraft of mechanical service, shelter, and other assistance, except for shelter for which no charge shall be made, all such articles shall be sold and such mechanical service and other assistance furnished at the cost thereof to the United States. All amounts received shall be credited to the appropriation from which such cost was paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill accords to foreign attachés in this country the same treatment that is accorded to our attachés in other countries as to purchasing gasoline and other aviation supplies from Government stations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 1082 will be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RANK OF WARRANT OFFICERS OF ARMY MINE-PLANTER SERVICE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2096) to amend section 4a of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4a of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended (41 Stat. 761), be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the last clause thereof reading as follows: "and shall take rank next below second lieutenants and among themselves according to the dates of their respective warrants" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and all warrant officers, including those of the Army Mine Planter Service, shall take rank next below second lieutenants and among themselves according to the dates of their respective warrants: Provided, That for command purposes aboard their vessels, warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service shall take rank among themselves, in the order, master, chief engineer, first mate, assistant engineer, second mate, each according to the date of appointment to such rating."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, there are two groups of warrant officers in the Army—warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service and warrant officers assigned to the several arms and services of the Regular Army. In the National Defense Act the warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service were not given rank below second lieutenant, as were the other groups of warrant officers. This bill merely places the two groups on the same basis as to rank. It involves no appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. La Follette in the chair). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2202) to establish a public works agency was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Security Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

W. K. RICHARDSON

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) for the relief of W. K. Richardson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the claimant in this measure, Mr. William K. Richardson, has for many years had a claim pending to compensate him for an alleged infringement by the United States of his patent, No. 1,141,415. Mr. Richardson invented a projectile consisting of three salient features, to wit, a long point, reduced cylinder length, and tapered base, now known as the streamline or boattail projectile. Patent was issued for this invention June 1, 1915, being Patent No. 1,141,415. A copy of Mr. Richardson's patent was forwarded to France by the Smithsonian Institution, and receipt of it was acknowledged August 30, 1915.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that the Secretary of War says:

The War Department reiterates its opposition to the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 34. The claimant has had his day in court. The merits of his claim have been fully considered upon those principles of law which are applied by the court to all other claimants in similar cases.

If the claimant has had his day in court, ought he to

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this bill was considered and favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The report was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen], who went into the matter very carefully, and thought Mr. Richardson was entitled to this relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the joint resolution go over for the time, and I will talk to the Senator from Minnesota about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2017) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act approved June 25, 1938, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], is not present. This is a very important bill, and I doubt whether it could be considered under the unanimous-consent rule. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

IVAN CHARLES GRACE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1894) for the relief of Ivan Charles Grace, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ivan Charles Grace the sum of $6,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of personal injuries and expenses incident thereto, as a result of a collision involving an Army truck on April 30, 1937, near Bejuco, Republic of Panama: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maria Enriquez, Crisanta, Anselmo, Agustin, and Irineo de los Reyes, the widow and children, respectively, of Jose de los Reyes, the sum of $3,100 in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States on account of the death of the said Jose de los Reyes as the result of an accident involving an Army airplane near Nichols Field, P. I., on March 17, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. TRIMBLE

The bill (H. R. 1301) for the relief of John J. Trimble was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John J. Trimble, West Haverstraw, N. Y., the sum of $2,500. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said John J. Mr. McNARY and Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 1904) relating to age requirements for persons in the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 1730) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to be transferred to positions under the competitive classified civil service was announced as next in order.

The bill (S. 1683) to amend the act of June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. 332), and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. 332), is hereby amended by striking out the word "five" appearing between the words "zone" and "for" in line 8 of said act and by substituting in lieu thereof the word "nine."

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS BY NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION

The bill (S. 1964) to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize charitable contributions by national banking associations was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 1964, and I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now offer two amendments to the bill, which are acceptable to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10 it is proposed to strike out "permit" and to insert in lieu thereof "do not expressly prohibit."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the amendment clarifies the provision of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the second amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "to contribute" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "from contributing."

The amendment was agreed to:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Eighth. To contribute to community funds, or to charitable, philanthropic, or benevolent instrumentalities conducive to public welfare, such sums as its board of directors may deem expedient and in the interests of the association, if it is located in a State the laws of which do not expressly prohibit State banking institutions from contributing to such funds or instrumentalities."

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS OF THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR

The bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall ask to have this bill recommitted to the Committee on Claims. The War Department desires to be heard, and no hearings were had and no opportunity was afforded the War Department to consider the matter. If I understand correctly, similar bills have been vetoed twice by the President of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, there have been hearings during the last 15 or 20 years, and the hearings were so voluminous that perhaps no one could ever go through them. The War Department has made a report opposing the bill. It has been passed by both Houses several times and has been vetoed by the President, with a very strong veto message, in each instance. I hardly think it would be necessary to put the committee to the trouble of holding hearings on the measure. I think it should be considered and disposed of on its merits.

Mr. KING. The War Department has advised me that it desires to present some views.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, we could not oppose recommitting the bill, if the War Department desires to be heard.

Mr. KING. I am perfectly willing to leave the bill on the calendar and let the War Department submit its views in writing for the consideration of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. That would be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

ATLAS POWDER CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2067) for the relief of Atlas Powder Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Atlas Powder Co. for reasonable compensation incident to its abandonment, under protest, at the request of the United States, of a certain parcel of land on Winter Island in Salem, Mass., more particularly described in the deed of E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. to Atlas Powder Co., dated December 28, 1912, recorded with Essex Deeds, Southern District, Book 2201, page 209, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim a sum not exceeding $1,762.75 in consideration for the execution by said Atlas Powder Co. of a quitclaim deed conveying to the United States all of its right, title, and interest in said parcel of land. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,762.75, or so much thereof as may be necessary for payment of this claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Department approved this bill, did it not?

Mr. CAPPER. It did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY K. SNYDER

The bill (S. 1821) for the relief of Harry K. Snyder was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of Harry K. Snyder, of Wilmington, Del., for disability alleged to have been incurred by him on February 16, 1926, while employed as a keeper of the United States Lighthouse Service, Port Penn, Del., and to determine said claim upon its merits under provisions of said act: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

LOYD J. PALMER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1452) for the relief of Loyd J. Palmer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and allow the claim of Loyd J. Palmer for compensation for services rendered as United States commissioner in the district of Minnesota from December 1, 1935, to June 6, 1937, inclusive, notwithstanding the fact that accounts therefor were not submitted by the commissioner within 1 year after the rendition of such services in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1933 (47 Stat. 1383).

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION OF LANDS TO THE PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2149) to add certain lands to the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase for the use and benefit of the Papago Indians with any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to authority contained in section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 994), notwithstanding any general limitation in acts making such appropriations against the use of the appropriated funds for the acquisition of lands outside of Indian reservations in Arizona, all privately owned lands, water rights, and improvements within the south half of section 9, township 14 south, range 11 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, containing 320 acres, more or less, in the State of Arizona, at the appraised value of $5,570.

SEC. 2. Title to the lands shall be taken in the name of the SEC. 2. Title to the lands shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Papago Tribe, and the lands, when purchased, shall become a part of the Papago Indian Reservation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Arizona give us a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this bill was drafted by the Office of Indian Affairs and was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It was introduced by my colleague and myself.

The statute now provides that no land may be added to an Indian reservation in Arizona without the authority of Congress. We have appropriated this year half a million dollars for the purchase of Indian lands, and the bill provides that out of that appropriation the purchase of 320 acres of land may be made at a cost not to exceed $5,570.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF UTE INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 72) to amend the act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on any and all claims which the Ute Indians or any tribe or band thereof may have against the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1938, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "north" to insert "and striking out the word "of following the word 'ownership' appearing in the first proviso of said section", so as to make the bill read:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado whether, in various bills which have been passed heretofore, going back some 15 or 20 years, in the interest of the Uncompander and Ute Indians, provisions were not made for the subject matter treated of in the pending measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, this measure is to correct a typographical error made in a bill on this subject passed a year ago. The bill will have no legislative effect whatever, except to correct a typographical error.

Mr. KING. I knew we had passed a number of bills affecting the Uncompanges and the Utes. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this measure relates only to the limited area in the Lincoln National Forest in New Mexico and provides that hereafter mining claims taken up under the mining laws of the United States shall be restricted in their use to mining operations alone. The reason for the bill is that certain mining claims in this particular area have been taken up and are being used for agricultural purposes, for the maintenance of cows, and hogs, and chickens, and things of that sort, resulting in the pollution of certain streams which are providing water for other districts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the bill recommended by the Depart-

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he regards this measure as within the authority of Congress. When Congress deeds the land, whether it is obtained by homestead, or by mining entry, or however it is obtained, and a patent is issued without restriction, I have some doubt about the power to impose restrictions.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator did not understand my statement. This measure will apply only to claims taken up in the future. Certainly we have a right to write such a restriction into the law. It applies only to the one area and does not affect the general mining laws at all. The land is even described.

Mr. KING. I doubt the wisdom of imposing such restrictions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION-BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2878) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, was announced as next in

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill is the annual publicworks bill. Each year the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs submits a bill authorizing the Navy to proceed with certain repairs to shore establishments. There is no "steel" in this bill. It covers 86 projects. The amount of money involved is $53,719,500. Some of the projects are maintenance facilities, aeronautical requirements, ordnance depots, supply facilities, hospital facilities, radio stations, training, education, welfare, and housing, navy yard, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and various items of that kind and character. Repair of the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I.; naval proving grounds, Dahlgren, Va.; navy powder factory, Indian Head, Md., and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What will be the amount of appropriation required at the present session of Congress?

Mr. WALSH. The bill would authorize $53,000,000. There are some amendments to the bill. Two of them should be explained. They are committee amendments offered in lieu of committee's amendments previously reported by the committee. I should like to refer to them when the bill is taken up for consideration.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be passed over until the calendar has been called, at which time it can be taken up and we can have a proper explanation of it.

The bill (S. 1854) to increase the number of misdshipmen allowed at the United States Naval Academy from the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. WALSH. I think a brief explanation will clarify any misunderstanding which may exist concerning the measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I objected to consideration of the bill before because the quota of those who may be admitted to the Naval Academy for the District of Columbia is much larger than that for the States. I am giving some study to the matter, and I ask that it go over for today.

Mr. WALSH. That is agreeable.

RIGHT-OF-WAY, FORT MIFFLIN MILITARY RESERVATION, PA.

The bill (S. 1666) to provide a right-of-way, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant to the Atlantic

Refining Co., its successors and/or assigns, an easement for a right-of-way for oil-pipe lines over, across, in, and upon the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, in the State of Pennsylvania: Provided, That such right-of-way shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that the same will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected thereby: Provided further, That all or any part of such right-of-way may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes, or for failure to comply with the terms or conditions of any grant hereunder, or for nonuse or for abandonment of rights granted under authority hereof.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide a right-of-way across the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation. Pa."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] has been called from the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying Senate bill 1666 be printed in the RECORD immediately following the action on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 399) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1666) to provide a right-of-way, having considered the same

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1666) to provide a right-of-way, having considered the same reported favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass, the title amended so as to read: "A bill to provide a right-of-way across the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, Pa."

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to grant an easement to the Atlantic Refining Co. for a right-of-way for oil pipe lines across the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, Pa.

The bill also provides that the right-of-way shall be granted only upon the finding by the Secretary of War that it will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected; that the grant will be subject to such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by the Secretary of War, and that all or any part of such right-of-way may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes, or for failure to comply with the terms of the grant or for nonuse.

The Secretary of War has no authority to grant easements of this character. However, the Attorney General has held that a revocable license could be granted, with the stipulation that the license subsequently obtain authority of Congress for continuation of the grant. Accordingly a revocable license dated November 22, 1938, was granted this company to install, operate, and maintain the oil pipe lines referred to for a period not to exceed 5 years. This license specifically provides that extension or renewal of the grant will not be made unless the licensee has meanwhile obtained the authority of Congress to continue the operation and maintenance of the pipe lines.

Report from the War Department on S. 1666, under date of April nance of the pipe lines.

Report from the War Department on S. 1666, under date of April 18, 1939, follows:

Hon. Morris Sheppard,

Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the bill S. 1666, "To provide a right-of-way."

The legal effect of the bill would be to authorize the Secretary of War to grant an easement to the Atlantic Refining Co. for a right-of-way for oil pipe lines across the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, Pa. The measure provides that—

"The right-of-way shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that it will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected.

"The grant will be subject to such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by the Secretary of War.

"All or any part of such right-of-way may be annulled or forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes, or for failure to comply with the terms of the grant or for nonuse."

There is no existing law authorizing the Secretary of War to grant easements for rights-of-way for oil pipe lines across military reservations.

While the Secretary of War has no authority to grant easements of this character, the Attorney General has held that a revocable license could be granted, with the stipulation that the licensee subsequently obtain authority of Congress for a continuation of the grant.

A revocable license dated November 22, 1938, was accordingly granted to the Atlantic Refining Co. to install, operate, and maintain the oil pipe lines referred to in the above bill for a period not to exceed 5 years. This license specifically provides that extension or renewal of the grant will not be made unless the licensee has meanwhile obtained the authority of Congress to continue the operation and maintenance of the pipe lines.

In view of the foregoing, the War Department has no objection to the enactment of S. 1666 into law.

This proposed legislation was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which advises that there would be no objection to the submission of the above report to the committee.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,

HARRY H. WOODRING, Sincerely yours, Secretary of War. TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT LAND TO THE STATE OF TEXAS

The bill (S. 912) for the relief of Joseph Kenney was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES T. MOORE

The bill (S. 871) for the relief of James T. Moore was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon James T. Moore, formerly chaplain with rank of first lieutenant of the Army of the United chaplain with rank of first lieutenant of the Army of the United States, before a retiring board to inquire whether at the time of his honorable discharge, December 22, 1922, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was the result of an incident of service, and upon the result of such inquiry the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said James T. Moore a first lieutenant in the Corps of Chaplains and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said James T. Moore shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances.

STOCKYARD DEALERS AND MARKETING AGENCIES

The bill (S. 446) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. GILLETTE. The report was written by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], but I will do the best I can to explain the bill.

An identical bill was passed by the Senate last year in the closing days of the session, but was not acted on by the House. The bill amends title III of the Packers and Stockyards Act, which deals particularly with stockyard dealers and marketing agencies. It attempts to do what the present act does not do. Because of the increased volume of direct buying, the seller on these markets does not have the protection which Federal supervision was intended to give him.

The present law provides for the establishment by the Secretary of Agriculture of a maximum rate of charge—a just and reasonable rate—and a minimum rate. The bill provides for fixing the maximum and minimum rates when they are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be just and reasonable.

The second part of the bill provides for the licensing of additional agents to perform these services under a finding of convenience and necessity.

Mr. TAFT. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1806) to provide for the construction and equipment of a building for the experiment station of the Bureau of Mines at Rolla, Mo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALTERATIONS OF AND REPAIRS TO NAVAL VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 126) to amend the act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, approved April 20, 1939, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, approved April 20, 1939 (Public, No. 37, 76th Cong.), be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out in the proviso the figures "$5,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,500,000", so as to make the proviso read: "Provided, That the total cost of such alterations and repairs shall not exceed $5,500,000."

Mr. WALSH. That joint resolution merely corrects an error made in the Government Printing Office. The bill as it passed the Senate and the House and was enacted into law carried the figures "$5,500,000." In printing the bill the Government Printing Office printed "$5,000,000" instead of "$5,500,000."

The purpose of the joint resolution is to correct that error. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I have two amendments to offer to the bill. One of them simply fixes the time for holding court in one of the districts. The bill divides the State of Kentucky into three judicial districts, and since judges were appointed for a particular district the second amendment simply provides that the judge shall be judge of the district in which he resides.

I ask that the two amendments to the committee amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the junior Senator from Kentucky to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, beginning with line 17, it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "year", in line 2 on page 8, and to substitute the following:

Frankfort, second Monday in February, second Monday in Sep-

Richmond, fourth Monday in February, fourth Monday in September.

Lexington, second Monday in March, second Monday in October. London, second Monday in February, first Monday in November. Bowling Green, second Monday in May, first Monday in December.

And at the end of the bill to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. United States District Judge MacSwinford, residing in Sc. 2. United States District Judge MacSwinford, residing in the eastern district, shall be the judge of the eastern district; United States District Judge H. Church Ford, residing in the middle district, shall be judge of the middle district; United States District Judge Shackelford Miller, Jr., residing in the western district, shall be judge of the western district. All other officials of these courts shall continue in the positions now held until separated from the service as now provided by law.

This act shall not become effective until the first day of January 1940.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator tell us whether or not the bill would necessitate the erection of a large public building?

Mr. LOGAN. It would not. Court is to be held at only one new place. Court will be held at the same places at which it has heretofore been held, except for one small town, where there is a courthouse.

We have three judges. They have caught up with their work. Kentucky is a large State. It borders on the Ohio River for four or five hundred miles, and on the Mississippi for 50 miles. The bill divides the State into three Federal judicial districts instead of two, and assigns each of the three judges to his own district to conduct his own court. As the Senator knows, of course, the appointment of a district attorney and a clerk will be necessary. Further than that I know of no expense which will be added. At first, I hardly thought the bill was necessary, but I have been convinced by letters which I have received that the bill should pass. I have not conferred with my colleague with respect to the last amendment offered, but yesterday I received a communication in which some of the judges asked that the bill be made effective beginning the 1st of January 1940, because they will have to have some time in which to shift and arrange their dockets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the committee amendment.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEONARD E. BROWNING

The bill (S. 1901) to extend to Sgt. Maj. Leonard E. Browning, United States Marine Corps, the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to retired enlisted men was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] whether or not the bill has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it has. The report is in the files of Senators. The bill does not increase the pay of the enlisted man. It permits him to retire after 30 years' service with the highest rank he held during the World War, without any increase in pay. Similar action has been taken in other cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sgt. Maj. Leonard E. Browning, United States Marine Corps, upon retirement after 30 years' service in the Army and Marine Corps (double time for service in the Philippines and China included), be placed on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps with the rank of captain: Provided, That no increase in active or retired pay or allowances shall result from the passage of this act over and above that now authorized under the act of June 6, 1924, to enlisted men on the retired list.

HIGHWAY BETWEEN CHORRERA AND RIO HATO, REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

The bill (S. 2163) to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes was announced as next

Mr. GILLETTE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. GILLETTE. Gladly.

Mr. LOGAN. The President, in one of his messages, recommended an appropriation, or an arrangement with the Republic of Panama whereby the United States and the Republic of Panama, for defense purposes, might jointly construct a highway. I understand the cost will be $1,500,000. The War Department prepared the bill and sent it to Congress with the recommendation that it pass. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee happened to be absent at the time, and the bill was sent to me with the request that it be expedited, so the Committee on Military Affairs favorably reported it. I do not know much about its purpose, other than that it is proposed to construct a highway for defense purposes in connection with the Panama Canal.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. As I understand the explanation, the cost of the proposed highway would be $1,500,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I understand. If the Senate will bear with me for a moment I should like to read what is said about it. I read from the report of the committee:

In the message of the President, dated January 12, 1939, to the Congress of the United States, he mentioned the necessity for the construction of a highway outside the limits of the Panama Canal Zone for purposes of defense of the zone. The highway to be constructed will be a concrete road, at a cost not to exceed $1,500,000, the completion of which will provide an essential transportation artery to areas considered vital to the defense of the Panama Canal. Letter of the War Department, dated April 8, 1939, on this subject, follows:

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,

. Morris Sherran, Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: There is enclosed the draft of a bill to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the collaboration of the United States, at a cost of not to exceed $1,500,000, with the Republic of Panama in the construction of a concrete highway outside the of Panama in the constitution of a control o

This proposed legislation was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget which reports that it is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS JOHNSON, Acting Secretary of War.

That is all I know about the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the highway referred to is the road to the airport?

Mr. LOGAN. That is my information.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.
Mr. McKELLAR. If it is, it ought to be built by all means.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. Fresident, will the Senator yield? Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I was in Panama last fall, and I went over to Rio Hato. Rio Hato is the auxiliary aviation field necessary for the defense of the Panama Canal Zone. It is the finest natural aviation field I have ever seen. It is situated on a broad prairie, where nothing has been done to the land. It is a perfect landing field. I visited the field with General Stone and the officer in charge of the air force. They say that the aviation field is absolutely essential to the defense of the Panama Canal. The auxiliary forces are sent out to the aviation field and kept there all the time. There is no road to the field. The proposed highway will inure to the benefit of the United States and not the Republic of Panama.

As I understood from General Stone, the proposal was that Panama should provide the right-of-way and the labor for the highway and that we should provide the material only. In order to reach this splendid aviation field it is necessary to have a highway. It cannot be reached by truck or transportation of that kind. The roads are utterly impassable. So it is absolutely essential to have some communication with the aviation field by land. That is the reason why the War Department is vitally interested. The highway would be between the Canal Zone itelf and Rio

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was in Panama last summer, and I can endorse all that the Senator from Indiana has said in connection with this enterprise. I think the highway would be most valuable to our defense.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, if the project has the value which it undoubtedly has, as stated by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Tennessee, and it is necessary to our national defense, if it is to cost $1,500,000, it is perfectly right and proper that we should authorize an appropriation of $1,500,000. However, the bill provides for the construction of the highway in cooperation with the Republic of Panama, and gives the President the discretion of determining what amount shall be contributed, up to the limit of $1,500,000. If the highway is entirely for the purpose of aiding the United States, and if the Republic of Panama would gain nothing from the construction of such a highway, why should the discretionary power be lodged in the President for the contribution of such sum as the President sees fit? Why do we not authorize an appropriation of $1,500,000? I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. Under the rule the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5136) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3. 1931, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that bill should go over for the present, because it is desirable to investigate certain matters in connection with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 897) to correct the military record of Walter Ballhaus was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

PROHIBITION OF EXPORTATION OF TOBACCO SEED AND PLANTS

The bill (H. R. 2378) to prohibit the exportation of tobacco seed and plants, except for experiment only, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to export any tobacco seed and/or live tobacco plants from the United States or any Territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any foreign country, port, or place, unless such exportation and/or transportation is in pursuance of a written permit granted by the Secretary of Agriculture. Such permit shall be granted by the Secretary only upon application therefor and after proof satisfactory to him that such seed or plants are to be used for experimental purposes only.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF ANNA BARBARA KOSICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1942) for the relief of Barbara Kosick, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "to", to strike out "Barbara Kosick" and insert "the legal representative of Anna Barbara Kosick, deceased"; in line 7, after the words "sum of", strike out "$9,500" and insert "$5,000"; in line 9, after the word "said", to strike out "Barbara Kosick" and insert "legal representative of Anna Barbara Kosick, deceased"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representative of Anna Barbara Kosick, deceased, of Los Angeles, Calif., the sum of $5,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said legal representative of Anna Barbara Kosick, deceased, on account of the death of her daughter Anna Barbara Kosick on or about the 10th day of September 1937 as the result of injuries sustained in a collision involving the car in which the said Anna Barbara Kosick was riding and a Government vehicle in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps at the intersection of Huntington Drive and Baldwin Avenue, in the city of Arcadia, county of Los Angeles, State of California: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representative of Anna Barbara Kosick, deceased."

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Smith, of Bend, Oreg., the sum of $220.65, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for expenses incurred, and property damage sustained, by him as a result of a collision between his automobile and a War Department truck which occurred near Fort Canby, Wash., on August 12, 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The bill (S. 2043) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 18 to May 25, 1940, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there is on the calendar an identical House bill. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5447) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 18 to 25, 1940, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 449, Senate bill 2043, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered.

SUSPENSION OF ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The bill (S. 1288) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. In explanation of the motion, I may state that the bill comes to the Senate with an adverse report from the Department of the Interior. The measure has also been reported adversely by the Committee on Mines and Mining. I quote these lines from the report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

For the years 1936, 1937, and 1938 I opposed the legislation to continue the suspension, and I am now of the opinion that further suspension of annual assessment work is not necessary nor in the public interest and should be discontinued.

He then points out that the increased price of metals and other factors make this proposed legislation unnecessary.

Without objection, the bill The PRESIDING OFFICER. will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the author of the bill is not present. I suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he let the bill go over rather than to have it indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HAYDEN. The author of the bill is in the same situation as are all other Senators from the West. It is important to know whether or not Congress is going to act on such a measure and to know in due time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is always important. Mr. HAYDEN. It is important in the sense that, if Congress delays action upon the bill until a few days before the end of the session, then the plea will be made, as it was made last year, the year before, and the previous year, that everyone who could afford to do the assessment work had done it and that the few that remained should obtain relief. When this proposal was considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining, the committee in substance said, "Let the bill be reported adversely and let action be promptly taken upon it by the Senate, at least 6 weeks before the end of the mining year, so that every holder of a mining claim may know with certainty that he must do his assessment work." For that reason the Senate should take final action upon the bill today.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no objection to that being done, if the Senator has consulted the author of the bill and it is agreeable to him.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have consulted with the author of the bill. He was present at the hearings. He knows that the Committee on Mines and Mining has made the adverse recommendation which I have indicated.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is he agreeable to that course being pursued?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Montana would like to have the bill passed, but he agrees with the committee that the Senate should act either favorably or unfavorably and settle the matter now. That is what I am trying to do. I advised the Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray] this morning that I would move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. I am sure that he understands the position that the Committee on Mines and Mining has taken and realizes that a final decision now is the sound and proper action to take.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In the West, as the Senator knows, there is a great deal of interest taken in the bill and many people, whether justly or not, want the extension. I have no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Arizona being pursued, if it is satisfactory to the Senator from Montana. If it is, I will not object at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is understood by the Senator from Montana that action will be taken now. The Senator from Montana, of course, would like to have his bill passed, but he realizes that the Senate is not going to pass the measure; that there is no chance for it to be passed. So the wise and proper thing to do is to determine the question without delay so that everyone concerned may know the exact situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It is a bold man who will venture to say what the action of the Senate will be. I would not attempt it.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can simply say that there is no chance for this bill becoming a law, first, because there are those in the Senate who would not permit it to be considered by unanimous consent; second, the House Committee on Mines and Mining has adopted a resolution that they will not consider further exemption from assessment work; and third, the President said when he approved one of the last bills of this character that he did so solely because the House Committee on Mines and Mining had by formal report stated there would not be another one. So the bill has three very substantial hurdles to surmount, and, under these circumstances, I believe I am justified in predicting that the bill will not become a law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not question at all what the Senator from Arizona says. I was only seeking to protect the Senator from Montana in relation to the bill. If the Senator from Arizona will assure us that the procedure suggested is known to the Senator from Montana—

Mr. HAYDEN. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And that the course proposed is acceptable to him, I will agree that the action suggested be taken.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Montana knows that I would make this motion. I advised him this morning that it was intended to dispose of the matter today. The Senator said that he would like to have his bill passed; but, if it could not be passed, the next important thing was to notify the holders of mining claims throughout the West that it would not be passed. That is what I am seeking to have done today.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Since the Senator says that, I think there is no objection to the course suggested by him.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona in his remarks suggested three reasons why the bill would not be passed. I should like to inquire if for several years in the past the same reasons have not been presented and that ultimately we have been able to have the bill passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, and very unfairly, because if it is held out during the year to men who can possibly afford to do their assessment work that they must do it, and they expend a hundred dollars on their mining claims, and then at the last minute the man who took a chance can save his hundred dollars, it is unjust to those who expended their money to do the work. For that reason the Committee on Mines and Mining had a hearing on this bill and determined that the time to give the notice was now, in order that the country might definitely know that there would be no such legislation. Therefore, I am asking that the action be taken today so that every claim owner may be fully aware that he must do his assessment work.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to make another inquiry. Is the position of the House committee this year any different than it has been in years past? The Senator said that they have very definitely said that they would not report such a bill as the one now being discussed. In years past have they or have they not given out similar announcements?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. This is what happened. In 1937 the House Committee on Mines and Mining made the following declaration in its report:

Notwithstanding the report of the Department, the committee recommends the passage of the bill, because prospectors were not put on notice that the practice of granting moratoriums from year to year would be discontinued. The committee agreed that any further attempt to waive the annual assessment work or payment will not be considered.

That was the last time that the House committee reported such a bill. The action taken last year, to which the Senator refers, was under a suspension of the rules of the House in the very closing days of the session, without action by the committee at all. My information is that the committee on Mines and Mining of the House of Representatives takes the same view as the committee in the Senate that any such bill as this should not be passed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. And their disposition is more definite and certain this year than it has been during the past few years.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am so advised.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. A margin must be allowed for the change of mind of Congress and the others concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona that Senate bill 1288 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

AGE REQUIREMENTS IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to Calendar No. 365, being Senate bill 1904.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1904) relating to age requirements for persons in the classified civil service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "any", to insert "maximum"; on page 2, line 1, after the words "reason of", strike out "the age of such person" and insert "having attained the maximum age so prescribed"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of the civil-service laws, or any rule or regulation made or promulgated thereunder, prescribing any maximum age limit with respect to any examination for or any position in the classified civil service of the United States, hereafter no person who is otherwise duly qualified for examination for or appointment or promotion to any position in such service shall be held ineligible for, or in any manner discriminated against with respect to, any such examination, appointment, or promotion by reason of having attained the maximum age so prescribed: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit the fixing of reasonable minimum or maximum age limits for positions which are hazardous or require great physical effort: And provided further, That any applicant admitted to any examination under the provisions of this act who passes such an examination and who is later appointed to a position in the classified civil service and who by reason of his age at the time of appointment may not serve a minimum of 15 years before he shall reach the retirement age for his group shall not be eligible for admission to or participation in the retirement benefits as provided in the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. MEAD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Was this bill brought to the attention of the Civil Service Commission, who are greatly interested in the protection of the civil-service system?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has it met with their approval?

Mr. MEAD. No; I will say to the Senator that the bill did not meet with their approval, although the Committee on the Civil Service brought it to their attention. The Committee on the Civil Service also brought the subject to their attention a year ago when a similar bill was favorably reported and passed. I will say to the Senator, however, that a special committee designated by the Secretary of Labor to study the problem of the older worker made a report, the recommendations of which are carried in this bill. I will quote briefly from that report as follows:

As part of a general attack on the problem of employment for older workers, we—strongly recommend that the Federal Civil Service Commission and appointing officers of the Government abolish age limits for entrance into the Government service.

Meaning the committee-

So the bill is in keeping with the report of a Government agency that was appointed by the Labor Department.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Has the Senator ascertained whether or not the Department of Labor itself has paid any attention to the report? I understand that the Department of Labor has more strict rules about the age limit than has any other department of the Government. I should like to have a little consistency. If this Department is going to have legislation enacted, I should like to have the Department itself follow it.

Mr. MEAD. I think the Senator's suggestion is very timely. I will say to the Senator, as one who has been as helpful as possible in bringing about a legislative program beneficial to the older workers, that the Labor Department has furnished me with a resolution bearing upon the subject which, in my judgment, if enacted into law, will result in the presentation of a constructive program along the lines indicated in this measure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator think the adoption of the resolution would cause the Labor Department to change its attitude toward the question within its own organization?

Mr. MEAD. I really am not familiar with the attitude of the Labor Department, but I will say from experience and observation that they have been cooperative in advancing the program in favor of the older workers which I am sponsoring and which includes several bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUST R. LUNDSTROM

The bill (S. 1225) for the relief of August R. Lundstrom was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws August R. Lundstrom, late of Company L, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 6th day of April 1903: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

GEORGE EDELMAN

The bill (S. 1069) for the relief of George Edelman was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army George Edelman shall be held and considerel to have been honorably discharged on November 15, 1899, as a private, Company B, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to accrue by reason of this act prior to its passage.

MARKERS FOR CERTAIN GRAVES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 608) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certain markers for certain graves, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any provision of existing law, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to furnish, at the option of the relative or representative of the deceased war veteran, either a flat stone grave marker, a standard flat bronze grave marker, or an upright stone grave marker or headstone, for the grave of any deceased person for which the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish a marker or headstone: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall furnish the upright stone marker, authorized by section 4877 of the Revised Statutes, for cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the price of each bronze grave marker furnished by the Secretary of War under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1047) for the relief of Emerson J. French was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT CLYDE SCOTT

The bill (S. 949) for the relief of Robert Clyde Scott was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Robert Clyde Scott shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company L, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, on September 27, 1912: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a somewhat similar measure was the subject of much discussion before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in the Seventy-fifth Congress.

In his annual report for 1937, the Attorney General of the United States said:

I believe, too, that there is something inherently illogical in the present system of having the budget and expenditures of the courts and the individual judges under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. The courts should be an independent, coordinate branch of the Government in every proper sense of the term. Accordingly I recommend legislation that would provide for the creation and maintenance of such an administrative system under the control and direction of the Supreme Court.

I quote from an article in the Washington Post of January 8, 1938:

The Government is the chief litigant in the Federal courts. It is a party in interest not alone in all the Federal criminal cases but in a large and growing number of civil actions involving the Government and its citizens.

There is no intention here even to intimate that the Attorney General or his aides would use their power over the purse strings of the judiciary to bring a recalcitrant judge into line. But the fact that the Attorney General could do so if he wished constitutes a factor in the relationship between the Justice Department and the courts which should be eliminated.

I am much pleased to say that the present Attorney General, Mr. Murphy, advocates the passage of this bill, as did the former Attorney General, Mr. Cummings.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a short editorial from the New York World-Telegram commenting on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the New York World-Telegram] ASHURST BILL AT WORK

Since the method of the Federal Ashurst bill has been adopted as an ideal by opponents of the city's petition for relief from overstuffed county and court pay rolls, Mayor LaGuardia has taken them at their word.

He has submitted to Albany, as a substitute for the maligned Desmond bill an exact counterpart of the Ashurst bill in Wash-The mayor's purpose and the city's essential need are the ington. The mayor's purpose and the city's essential need are the same as before—to curb future unlimited boosts in these correspondences and the correspondence of the correspo and county jobs and to bring current excessive salaries under reasonable control.

The Desmond bill would have accomplished that and, we are The Desmond bill would have accomplished that and, we are convinced, with ample safeguards to the judiciary. Opponents viewed it with unconcealed alarm, however, as a destroyer of the independence of the courts. It ran, they said, "directly contrary to the best current thought as typified by the support of the Ashurst bill in Congress."

And what is the Ashurst bill which commands support from the best current thought? It provides that budgets for the Federal courts shall be drawn up by an independent administrative officer and transmitted without change to Congress. And Congress, which has responsibility for levying taxes and raising revenue to meet its bills, may take this independent judiciary budget and amend and cut it as it deems wise. The Ashurst bill certainly is no blank check for the judiciary.

The mayor's Ashurst bill provides for independent administrative officers to submit the budgets prepared by the courts themselves, without change, to the appropriating body of the city. And this body, responsible for raising revenue to meet the bill, would have the duty of scrutinizing and modifying expenditures as conditions warrant.

The board of estimate would perform this function, and we predict that under this Ashurst bill it would make important savings by eliminating sinecures and reducing fat salaries in accordance with services rendered. When this dire effect of the Ashurst method is perceived by its newly enlisted friends a sudden cooling of their enthusiasm may be

Mr. HATCH. I have no desire to take the floor, except to ask the Senator from Arizona if he does not think the bill might be passed today. I know of no objection to the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as it may express any opinion, is in favor of the bill. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HATCH. That is quite true; yes.

Mr. ASHURST. If I am correct, the Chief Justice of the United States sent a letter which is in the Record, expressing his approbation of this bill.

Mr. HATCH. It is included in the report of the committee. Mr. ASHURST. Of course, if the bill may be passed, I shall be delighted to have action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of, there are two corrective amendments which I should like to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 1, after the words "by the", to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "Supreme Court"; in line 3, after the words "by the", to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "aforesaid Court"; in line 11, after the word "proper", to insert: "Neither the Director nor the Assistant Director, nor any official or employee, shall, during his term of office or employment, directly or indirectly engage in the practice of law in any of the Federal courts of the United States"; on page 3, line 18, after the word "thereto", to insert "but inspections of the dockets of the courts outside the continental United States shall be made through officials of the United States Government residing within the jurisdiction, respectively, of the said courts"; in line 21, after the word "disbursement", to insert "directly and through the several United States marshals as now provided by law"; on page 4, line 4, after the word "the", to strike out "provision" and insert "providing"; and on page 7, line 18, after the word "shall", to strike out "constitute" and insert "be deemed to be", so as to make the bill read:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am in such a high state of felicity over the passage of this bill that I cannot easily remain quiet. Permit me to congratulate the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and particularly the subcommittee which considered this bill. It breaks new ground, and I believe for years to come it will remain a monument to their assiduity and their diligence. The subcommittee was composed of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] as chairman, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the genial and courteous and able chairman of the committee always overwhelms us with his eloquence and his graciousness. I cannot reply in kind, of course; but I think, as chairman of the subcommittee, in behalf of the subcommittee, I should at least say, "Thank TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD BY MEMBERS OF MILITARY ESTABLISH-MENT, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2987) providing for the transfusion of blood by members and former members of the Military Establishment, and by employees of the United States Government, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of February 9, 1927, entitled "An act relating to the transfusion of blood by members of the Military Establishment" (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 30) is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "That any person in the Military Establishment, or who has been a member of the Military Establishment, and any employee of the United States Government, who shall furnish blood from his or her veins for transfusion to the veins of a member or former member of the Military Establishment who is a patient in a Government hospital shall be entitled to be paid therefor such reasonable sum, not to exceed establishment who is a patient in a Government hospital shall be entitled to be paid therefor such reasonable sum, not to exceed $50, as may be determined by the head of the hospital concerned, from public funds available for the operation of such hospital: Provided, That expenditures heretofore made to persons in Government service for blood furnished from his or her veins for transfusion to the veins of an official patient in a Government hospital are hereby authorized and validated."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] whether this is deemed proper legislation.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, under existing law there is authorization for paying for blood used in transfusion processes in the veterans' hospitals if the person from whom the blood is taken is in the Military Establishment of the Government. This bill simply broadens the matter so that a person who does not happen to be in the Military Establishment when a blood transfusion is necessary may be paid as are those in the Military Establishment. That is all there is to the bill. Its passage is requested by the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I notice that the title of the bill refers to the transmission of blood by employees of the Government. There was a measure a year or two ago, about which there was much discussion, which had to do with a proposal to infuse blood into the judicial department. Is there any connection between these bills? [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. I do not think there is any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OTIS M. CULVER AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 1882) for the relief of Otis M. Culver, Samuel E. Abbey, and Joseph Reger, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of Otis M. Culver, Samuel E. Abbey, Joseph Reger, and August H. Krueger."

EDWARD HAGENSON

The bill (S. 182) for the relief of Edward Hagenson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

In the consideration of such claim, any such disability of said Edward Hagenson shall be held and considered to be directly attributable to injury received by him in the performance of his duties as an employee of said railroad.

CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS FOR THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1842) to authorize the construction of certain vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,425,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Commerce for the construction of one main surveying ship of not over 1,500 tons light displacement tonnage and of one auxiliary surveying vessel of not over 125 tons light displacement tonnage, including purposes or construction of complete equipment. including purchase or construction of complete equipment and outfit and including cost of preparation of plans, specifications, and inspection during construction, said ships to be designed and equipped for Coast and Geodetic Survey duties in Alaska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this bill authorizes the construction of certain survey vessels in line with the program of the Department of Commerce. The present survey vessels are old mine sweepers, now more than 20 years of age. New vessels are very greatly needed on the coast of Alaska and around the Aleutian Islands, and the Navy is pressing for surveys, which are necessary to the national defense. The vessels we now have are not adequate for that work.

Mr. KING. I asked for an explanation because my recollection is that at the last session of Congress we made rather a large appropriation-it may have been only an authorization-for the construction of ships for the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not familiar with that act, but I am familiar with this matter. It has been very carefully considered by the committee, and we would not recommend the bill if we were not sure that the ships are needed. The ships we now have are utterly inadequate and are worn out.

Mr. KING. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENT OF WAGES BY SEAMEN

CHANGE OF MASTERS OF VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 1782) to amend section 4335 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to change of masters of vessels, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, are these various bills regarded as proper?

Mr. BAILEY. The bill we have just passed is a mere formality, but it is necessary to the proper administration of ships.

RENEWAL OF LICENSES OF VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 1784) to amend section 4498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, relative to the renewal of licenses of vessels was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Y., now occupied by wye track of said railroad company under the terms and provisions of a revocable license granted by the Department of Commerce, which license expires by limitation during 1939, or such modification thereof as may be deemed to be in the public interest. The New York Central Railroad Co. for such use of the propery in question shall pay the same yearly rental as stipulated in stated existing revocable license or such yearly rental as may be hereafter determined by the Secretary of Commerce, at his discretion: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall grant or convey or be held to grant or convey to said railroad company, its successors or assigns, during such time as it or they may hold, said land under the lease hereby authorized, nor any right or privilege to take or remove any of such land or structures other than the property of the said railroad company: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce may at any time during the said lease period of 25 years, at his discretion, terminate and cancel said lease, in case said company shall fail to comply with the stipulated terms or conditions. It shall also be stipulated in the lease hereby authorized that upon termination or expiration the said railroad company shall promptly remove from the land all of its property and restore the same to the condition when first taken or condition otherwise satisfactory to the Government.

taken or condition otherwise satisfactory to the Government.

Sec. 7. That so much of sections 1 and 2 of the act approved July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 549), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic of the State of New York, certain portions of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation, Rockland County, N. Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the contemplated improvement of the Lighthouse Service be very expensive?

Mr. BAILEY. No, it will not be expensive; but it is very necessary. We must provide for the improvement of the Lighthouse Service by way of the procurement of tenders, by way of the furnishing of further equipment of the ships serving the Lighthouse Service. The Lighthouse Service is becoming increasingly important by reason of the development of aeronautics. This is a department bill and is fully approved.

Mr. KING. What will be the cost of the administration of Senate bill 2170?

Mr. BAILEY. The Commissioner of Lighthouses is authorized to employ draftsmen and engineers to prepare temporary plans and specifications.

Mr. KING. Is there no limitation upon the amount to be expended for preparation and for final execution? There should be some limitation upon the authorization. I beg to suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think there is any appropriation or any authorization of an appropriation in the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill pass, with the understanding that after examination a motion may be made to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain pro-

So as to make the bill read:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is identical with the next bill on the calendar, House bill 4997. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and its consideration at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4997) giving the consent and approval of Congress to the Rio Grande compact, signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA

"That in order to provide for the adequate housing, feeding, and transportation of the visiting public and residents of Mount McKinley National Park in Alaska, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto; to purchase upon such terms as he may deem proper the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. that are operated and used in said park under contract authorization by the Department of the Interior, and the equities of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. in the business developed and conducted in connection therewith; to purchase or otherwise acquire motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and all necessary fixtures and equipment, and to operate, repair, recondition, and maintain the same in order to carry out the purposes of this act, notwithstanding the restrictions now or hereafter imposed by law with regard to the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles; and to operate the equipment and facilities herein authorized, directly or by contract or contracts with any individual, company, firm, or corporation, under such schedule of rates, terms, and conditions as he may deem proper: Provided further, That out of the revenues from and the appropriations for the Alaska Railroad, there is authorized to be used such amount thereof as may be necessary for the purchase of the property of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., and the purchase, construction, operation, and maintenance of the facilities for the public as herein authorized."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Perhaps I can explain the bill. The Alaska Railroad Co. operates a hotel near Mount McKinley National Park. They have not authority to take care of buildings off the right-of-way. This permits that to be done. The proposed legislation is much desired, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDGE, WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

The bill (S. 1554) to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise to inquire of either of the Senators from Washington whether the controversy, or perhaps I would better say the disagreement, between some of the Representatives of that State, has been settled.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think it has been settled.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. What was the question, Mr. President?

Mr. KING. I was asking whether there has not been some disagreement regarding this bill between Representatives of the State of Washington, either in the House or in the Senate, or in both.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is interposed, and the bill will go over, under the rule.

RELIEF FOR WATER USERS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 1898) to authorize further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian reclamation projects was announces as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the same as the next number on the calendar, House bill 5076. Is there objection to substituting the House bill for the Senate bill and considering the House bill at this time?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5076) to authorize further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian reclamation projects was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1898 is indefinitely postponed.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF REORGANIZATION PLANS NOS. I AND II

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) providing that reorganization plans Nos. 1 and 2 shall take effect on July 1, 1939, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of reorganization plan No. I, submitted to the Congress on April 25, 1939, and the provisions of reorganization plan No. II, submitted to the Congress on May 9, 1939, shall take effect on July 1, 1939, notwithstanding the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this joint resolution, introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], makes effective plans Nos. I and II, already sent to the Congress by the President and already approved in effect by the defeat of motions to reject. For accounting purposes it is desirable that plan No. II take effect on the 1st day of July. Plan No. I will take effect on the 25th day of June, anyway, and plan No. II will take effect on the 7th of July. In order that the accounting and bookkeeping in the department may be coincident with the fiscal year, it is desirable that the plans shall take effect on July 1, which is only a week ahead of the date on which the second plan would take effect anyway.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], and for the purpose of simplifying the bookkeeping I think the effective date should be the first day of the fiscal year. Nothing remains to be done save to get started with the work, and I think it should begin on the first day of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2229) authorizing and providing for the construction of additional facilities on the Canal Zone for the purposes of more adequately providing for the defense of the Panama Canal and for increasing its capacity for the further needs of interoceanic shipping, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 1869) to protect interstate commerce from the dangers of unsound financial structures and to establish improved procedures and standards for financial rehabilitation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. That bill will have to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. That completes the calendar.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 3, on page 8, line 14, after the word "section", to strike out "1" and to insert "3 (a)", and on line 19, after the word "purposes", to insert "of section 3 (a)", so as to read:

Mr. WALSH. On behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I offer an amendment to take the place of the amendment heretofore proposed as section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. In lieu of section 5 as reported by the committee, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the committee amendment on page 9, after line 13, being section 5, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of such public works and utilities, including buildings and accessories, as are needed to equip South Boston drydock for use as an annex of the Boston Navy Yard in the repair of naval vessels.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated and hereby authorized to be suppropriated.

priated, such sums not to exceed $2,545,000 as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of section 5 (a) of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps a brief explanation should be made of the amendment. The Navy Department has recommended that an appropriation of $3,500,000 be authorized, to be used in conjunction with funds provided by private capital, in building a huge and necessary drydock in New York Harbor. In view of the contribution by the Government, preference was to be given the Navy Department in the use of the dock. The Navy Department already owns a drydock in South Boston, the largest in all the United States, but it has no facilities for the repair of vessels. The amendment strikes out the earlier suggestion of the Navy Department and substitutes an appropriation of $2,500,000 for equipment and for the necessary machinery which would be required to repair the largest naval vessels at this large drydock. That is decidedly preferable to the plan or arrangement at first suggested of entering into a partnership with private capital for the purpose of doing this work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. There is one more committee amendment on page 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13 it is proposed to add the following new section:

Sec. 6. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to continue the employment, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, of such employees now carried on the rolls as will be required for the preparation of plans and specifications and administrative work in connection with the public-works and public-utilities projects authorized by this act or heretofore otherwise authorized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 13.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I discuss a matter in which our Government and the American people are profoundly interested. A discussion of this matter is not only justified but, in my opinion, made necessary by reason of the action of the British Government in issuing what is called the White Paper, which deals with Palestine and its obligations under the terms of the mandate which it voluntarily accepted. It repudiates solemn covenants made with 52 nations and its obligations to the United States created under the mandate and the treaty of 1924 entered into by the British Government and the United States.

The so-called White Paper has created deep concern among peoples in many countries and particularly those which are parties to the League of Nations and joined in naming the British Government as a mandatory to carry out solemn and important duties and obligations in territory which formerly belonged to the Turkish Empire but which was transferred to the League of Nations to be administered in a just and equitable manner. This action of the British Government which, as I have stated, is equivalent to an abandonment of its duty, a repudiation of its obligation, is a most calamitous act and affects not only the residents of Palestine but hundreds of thousands of persecuted people in European countries who are the victims of relentless, sadistic, and barbarous treatment. It closes the door to hundreds of thousands who can find no resting place. It is a cruel and illegal act and, as I have stated, is a repudiation of solemn pledges which had been voluntarily assumed by the British Government.

Our Government is profoundly interested in all matters relating to Palestine, and particularly those which are connected with the Balfour declaration and the treaty of 1924 between the United States and Great Britain.

At the conclusion of the World War the Treaty of Versailles was entered into and under its terms Turkey renounced all her rights to Palestine to which she was entitled. Article 22 of the covenant of the treaty provides that certain territories which ceased to be under the sovereignty of the states which formerly governed them should be subject to the mandates which were to be issued by the League of Nations, the terms of the mandates to be explicitly defined in each case by the council of the League. The Palestinian territory which passed under the Treaty of Versailles to Great Britain under the mandate consisted of approximately 45,000 square miles, 10,500 of which were west of the River Jordan and the balance east of the river. The historic right of the Jews to Palestine for a homeland was recognized. The greater part of the territory within the boundaries of Palestine was vacant and unoccupied land, but a limited area was cultivated, and the greater part consisted of hills and mountains and swamps and arid and desert lands which for centuries had lain fallow. Title to the unoccupied lands passed from Turkey to the allied and associated powers and under the mandate was transferred to Great Britain as a mandatory power. Prior to and during the World War there were a large number of Jews in Palestine. They were thrifty and progressive and were earnestly devoting themselves to the rebuilding of the lands which had belonged as a heritage to their forefathers. In various countries there were remnants of the Jewish race. many of whom looked with eagerness to the day when the barren wastes of Palestine would be reclaimed and the land of their forefathers made habitable for several millions of the Jewish race. These facts were recognized by the allied and associated powers and emphasized by the League of Nations and the terms of the mandate dealing with Palestine.

The drafters of the Treaty of Versailles were familiar with the action taken by the British Government and in part by the United States as set forth in what is known as the Balfour declaration. That declaration reads as follows:

His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for Jewish people and will use their best efforts to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in other countries.

Great Britain accepted the mandate and assumed the obligation of establishing in Palestine a national homeland for the Jewish people. The American people were greatly interested in the movement to create a national homeland in Palestine for the Jewish people, and our Government, in my opinion, greatly influenced the formulation of the Balfour declaration and the terms of the mandate drafted by the League of Nations, under which Great Britain, as a mandatory, assumed the responsibility of executing such terms.

During the discussions culminating in the Balfour declaration the President of the United States was consulted and gave his approval of the same before it was issued by the British Government on the 2d day of November 1917.

I invite the attention of the Senate to a letter written by President Wilson in 1918, which shows his interest in Palestine and the Zionist movement.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Washington, August 31, 1918.

My Dear Rabbi Wise: I have watched with deep and sincere interest the reconstructive work which the Weizmann Commission has done in Palestine at the instance of the British Government, and I welcome an opportunity to express the satisfaction I have felt in the progress of the Zionist movement in the United States and in the allied countries since the declaration by Mr. Balfour on behalf of the British Government of the Great Britain's approval of the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and his promise that the British Government would use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of that object, with the understanding that nothing would be done to prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish people in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by the Jews in other countries.

I think that all Americans will be deeply moved by the report that even in this time of stress the Weizmann Commission has been able to lay the foundation of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem with the promise that that bears of spiritual rebirth.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

As stated, the American people were profoundly interested in the purpose of the Balfour declaration, and in 1922 a joint resolution was adopted by Congress, to the effect that-

The United States of America favors the establishment in Pales-tine of the national home for the Jewish people, in accordance with provisions contained in the declaration of the British Government of November 2, 1917, known as the Balfour declaration.

This resolution, as I recall, met with unanimous approval in both Houses of Congress, and certainly it was approved by the American people.

As further evidence of the interest which our Government and the American people had in the plan for the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, a treaty between the United States and Great Britain was entered into in 1924, which specifically dealt with the mandate under which Great Britain became a mandatory for the administration of the territory of Palestine. contains all of the provisions of the mandate.

It declared that Great Britain, as mandatory, was responsible for putting into effect the Balfour declaration for the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people. This treaty fully advised our Government and the American people of the obligations resting upon Great Britain as mandatory, and also made it clear that our Government was interested in the faithful discharge of the obligations of the mandate which had been assumed by the British Government.

The mandate, which, as stated, was set forth in haec verba in the treaty, declared that Great Britain was responsible for placing the country, namely, Palestine, under such political, administrative, and economic conditions as "will secure the establishment of the Jewish national home and the development of self-governing institutions, and the safeguarding of the civil and religious rights of all the inhabitants of Palestine."

The mandate also set forth the fact that the Jewish agency was recognized as a body politic with the duty of advising and cooperating with the administration of Palestine in all matters relating to the establishment of the Jewish national home and the interests of the Jewish population in Palestine.

An important provision of the mandate, which, as stated. is incorporated in the treaty between the British Government and the United States, required the mandatory "to facilitate Jewish immigration under suitable conditions," and that it should, in cooperation with the Jewish agency, encourage close settlement by Jews on the land, including state lands and waste lands. There was also a provision in the mandate that the administration should facilitate the acquisition of Palestinian citizenship by Jews who take up their permanent residence in Palestine.

The mandatory was required to make an annual report to the Council of the League of Nations, satisfactory as to the measures which it had taken to carry out the provisions of the mandate. It further provided that if any disputes arose beween the mandatory and other members of the League of Nations relating to the interpretation or application of the terms of the mandate which were not settled, jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice was to be invoked.

The mandate also provided that the consent of the Council of the League of Nations was required for any modification of the terms of the mandate.

May I say by way of parenthesis that the terms of the mandate have been violated by Great Britain in a number of particulars and by the provisions of the White Paper, which change the terms of the mandate without the consent of the Council of the League.

The treaty to which our Government is a party, after reciting the provisions of the mandate, provides that the United States consents to the administration of Palestine by the British Government, but pursuant to the provisions of the mandate; and that the United States and its nationals shall enjoy all the rights and benefits secured under the terms of articles 2 to 9, inclusive, of the mandate, even though our Government is not a member of the League of Nations.

The treaty also declares that the United States, by participating in the war against Germany—

Contributed to her defeat and the defeat of her allies, and to the renunciation of the rights and title of Germany and her allies in the territory transferred by them, though it has not ratified the covenant of the League.

In effect, it gives the United States, though it failed to ratify the Versailles Treaty, an interest in the territories surrendered by the defeated Central Powers to the victorious nations

An important provision of the treaty declares that nothing in the treaty shall be affected by any modification which may be made in the terms of the mandate, unless such modification shall have been assented to by the United States. As I have indicated, the White Paper not only modifies the mandate and the duties and obligations resting upon the mandatory, but it repudiates and seeks to repeal important provisions in the mandate. Our Government, not having consented to these modifications and repudiations, has the right to protest against violations by Great Britain of the terms of the mandate and the provisions of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States.

As I have indicated, Great Britain accepted the mandate and the primary purpose of it was to establish in Palestine a national home for the Jewish people. In my opinion, the mandatory has failed to carry out the letter or the spirit of the declaration or the terms of the mandate, and has contravened the terms of the treaty between it and the Government of the United States. It has hampered the Jews in their efforts to develop the resources of Palestine and to provide homes for their coreligionists. It has refused to regard a large part of Palestine, particularly that part lying east of the Jordan River, as within the provisions of the mandate.

It is worthy of note that the White Paper concedes that the growth of the Jewish national home and its achievements in many fields are—

A remarkably constructive effort which commands the admiration of the world and must in particular be a source of pride to the Jewish people.

It admits that the British Government has been charged as a mandatory with authority to secure the development of self-governing institutions. And further adds that the fulfillment of the policy of establishing a Jewish national home makes it necessary that the Jewish community in Palestine should be able to increase its numbers by immigration, but that such immigration should not be a burden on the people of Palestine as a whole and that it should not deprive any section of the present population of their employment.

In my opinion, the advent of the Jews into Palestine has not deprived any section of the population of their employment, but, upon the contrary, has materially advanced the cause of the Arabs and all of the inhabitants of Palestine and laid the foundations for further expansion, growth, and development of the entire country. But the terms of the White Paper seeks to prevent the acquisition of land by Jews and gives the Commissioner almost unlimited power to establish areas, and all land sales will be prohibited. In this connection it is worthy to note that Sir John Simon, now Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Viscount Hailsham, who was Lord Chancellor until a few months ago, in a letter to the London Times, in November 1930, denounced the late Ramsey MacDonald for introducing a temporary limitation of immigration. They stated that it was a grave legal question as to whether this step was not in violation of the mandate and recommended that a World Court opinion be obtained before such limitation was enforced.

The new policy announced in the White Paper, as I have stated, violates the provisions of the mandate, as well as the treaty with the United States. It denies the Jewish people the right to build their national home and seeks to confer authority upon the Arabs to control Palestine and the Jewish population. Certainly it prevents Jewish immigration, and when one-third of the total population is reached, it seeks to establish a territorial ghetto for Jews in their homeland.

A brilliant writer—Miss Dorothy Thompson—referring to the White Paper, states that—

For a piece of disingenuous argument, the latest British Government paper, detailing plans for the future of Palestine, deserves to rank with the late Runciman report by which the British Government presented a lofty argument for whitewashing terror and preparing the way for the ruthless conquest of Czechoslovakia.

In view of all the facts, I submit that there is justification for the contention that if the mandatory carries into effect the terms of the White Paper, it will be regarded as a faithless trustee, a violator of solemn pledges and a betrayer of a persecuted and helpless race. In many points of the world protests are being heard against this policy and the betrayal upon the part of the British Government.

The Pro-Palestine Federation of America, an organization of Christians which has favored the movement for a Jewish national home in Palestine, has asked President Roosevelt to intervene against the application of the plan announced in the White Paper. The telegram was signed by a large number of persons, including Charles Edward Russell, president of the federation; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Bishop Francis J. McConnell; Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, secretary emeritus of the Federal Council of Churches; John Haynes Holmes, of the Community Church; the Rev. Ames I. Dushaw, of the First Presbyterian Church; the Rev. John Paul Jones, of the Unity Church of Bay Ridge; William R. Hopkins, former city manager of Cleveland: the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, former president of the Greater New York Federation of Churches; Dr. Justin H. Moore, dean of New York City College; Justice Carroll Hayes; Prof. Bradley Otis; and Dr. Guy Emery Shipler, editor of The Churchman. The telegram to the President declares that-

This calamitous act of the British Government comes when the very life and existence of millions of Jews in Europe are endangered.

It further states that-

Over 5,000,000 Jews in Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Rumania, and Poland are systematically deprived of an opportunity to earn a livelihood; they are being evicted from those countries. All continents are hermetically sealed against them. Where shall they go? Palestine is not a question of life or death for the Arabs as it is for the Jews. The Holy Land, cradle of Jewish culture and civilization, morally, legally, and historically belongs to the Jewish race.

Your past efforts in behalf of the Jewish right to Palestine fully accord with basic principles of international law and the democratic concept of inviolability of international covenants. We respectfully urge you, Mr. President, to continue your efforts to convince the British Government that the only way to preserve peace and democracy is by living up to signed pledges and covenanted obligations. We feel that the United States, whose friendship and cooperation are so eagerly sought by Great Britain, has the unmistakable right to refer to the American-British Palestine mandate convention of December 3, 1924, and demand full application of its stipulations, without any modifications involving a violation of the mandate for Palestine.

I think it is known that our Government has communicated with the British Government concerning the Palestinian situation and I have reason to believe that it has in every proper way indicated its interest and the interest of the American people in the faithful execution of the treaty between our Government and the British Government.

One of the distinguished citizens of the United States is Mr. Justice Brandeis. He has the confidence and esteem of the American people. According to Dr. Goldman, Mr. Justice Brandeis has contended that—

1. A legal obligation assumed by Great Britain is the basis for Jewish constructive enterprise in Palestine. That legal right, sustained by humanitarian needs, cannot be obliterated for private advantage.

2. What does the world propose to do with the Jews from whom exile is enforced? Unless civilization has so reverted to primitivism as to wish the destruction of homeless Jews, it must encourage the proved medium to solve in great measure the problem of Jewish homelessness.

3. The absorptive capacity is stated to be the criterion by which Jewish entry into Palestine should be determined. Disinterested experts have proved that Palestine is equipped to absorb 100,000

4. On the basis of legal right, which Great Britain with the sanction of the world established, and of the pressing human need, Jews will continue to enter Palestine, assured of the confident support of the Jewish people that they will build in Palestine a land beneficial to all its inhabitants.

Some question has been raised as to the capacity of Palestine for an increase in population. May I say that I visited Palestine for the purpose of investigating economic, political, and other conditions, and particularly to ascertain its resources and capacity for an increased population? After a rather careful examination, I reached the conclusion that that part of Palestine west of the Jordan River was capable of providing homes and employment for several millions of people; and that that part of Palestine east of the Jordan River was capable of supporting at least a million people. Experience in the last 20 years in Palestine has proved that the economic absorptive capacity of that country cannot be predicted by any rule or yardstick. It is a dynamic and expanding concept, and cannot therefore be definitely predicted.

Immigration is conditioned by absorptive capacity, but immigration itself, with its accompanying influx of wealth and the driving power of energy, enlarges absorptive capacity by creating new opportunities for livelihood.

This is quoted from Mr. Granovsky, in his Absorptive Capacity and Development, Palestine and Middle East Economic Magazine, January 1937, page 15.

The British Royal Palestine Commission reports that-

In 1934 there were 42,359 authorized immigrants into Palestine, and in 1935, 61,854. * * * So far from reducing "economic absorptive capacity," immigration increased it. The more immigrants came in, the more work they created for local industries to meet their needs, especially in building; and more work meant more room for immigrants under the "labor (immigration) sched-ule." Unless, therefore, the Government adopted a more restrictive policy, or unless there were some economic or financial set back, there seemed no reason why the rate of immigration should not go on climbing up and up.

That view of the British Government is important, and negatives the contention made now by some that there is but limited opportunity for further development in Palestine. The British agent in Haifa, reporting to British Government Department of Overseas Trade on economic conditions in Palestine in July 1935, writes as follows:

Various factors have combined to foster the rapid development Various factors have combined to foster the rapid development of local industries in the past 2 or 3 years. In the first place they form an outlet for the new capital flowing into the country, a considerable proportion of which is still lying idle. They also provide work for new immigrants. Their promoters are often new arrivals with years of experience in particular industries which they desire to use in their new home. Local demand has so much increased as to justify local production of certain goods and expansion of existing factories. The promoters are fortunate in that they can open their works with the most modern plant and methods.

Permit me to invite attention to some reports indicating the growth of Jewish industry and handicrafts from 1921 to 1937, as follows:

	1921-22	1930	1933	1937	In- crease since 1933
Establishmentsnumber Personnel: Owners and work-	1, 850	2, 475	3, 388	5, 606	Percent 65
ersnumber_ Value of annual output_LP	4,750 500,000	10, 968 2, 510, 000	19, 595 5, 352, 000	30, 040 9, 109, 000	53 75
Capital LP Horsepower LP	600, 000 880	2, 234, 000 10, 100	5, 371, 000 50, 500	11, 637, 300 106, 495	108

Thus, since 1921, the personnel in Jewish industry increased 6 times, the output 17 times, the capital 18 times, and machinery equipment even to a greater degree. (Census of Jewish Industry and Handicrafts, 1937, Bulletin of Economic Research Institute, March-April 1938, p. 54.)

In a report of the British Government's Administration of Palestine and Trans-Jordan in 1933, page 27, it is stated that the influx of Jewish immigrants and Jewish capital developed work opportunities and quickened industrial activities for all sections of the population of the country. As early as 1933 the Government reported that the non-Jewish industrial undertakings had increased by more than 80 percent over the pre-war non-Jewish establishments in the country.

Two other notable examples are as follows:

First. Jews of Palestine, since 1932, invested approximately $100,000,000 in building construction, giving employment, in 1935 alone, to 16,500 Jews. (Horowitz and Hinden, Economic Survey of Palestine, p. 106.)

Second. In 1937 transportation, clerical work, unskilled work, services, liberal professions, and unclassified work gave employment to 41,658 additional workers. (Memorandum to Permanent Mandates Commission 1937, June 1938, p. 16.)

Thus we see the dynamic principle of economic absorptive capacity at work. Not only has it not displaced any part of the non-Jewish population but it has made new places for them where none existed before.

The development of agriculture and horticulture parallels that of industry, as shown by the report of the Palestine Royal Commission (op. cit. supra, pp. 233-34). The same report refers to the maritime plain, the area of Palestine which is now the most productive and the most thickly populated. It refers to the condition of the plain in 1913, as follows:

The road leading to Gaza to the north was only a summer tract suitable for transport by camels and carts. * * * In the rainy season it was impassable. In the villages no orange groves, chards, or vineyards were to be seen. * * Trees generated a rare sight in these villages. Trees generally

In all the villages dotting the plain * * * there was only one well in a village, and in the smaller villages there were no wells at all. Water was scantily used for drinking purposes by man and beast.

Houses were all of mud. No windows were anywhere to be seen. The cattle were small and poor; so were the chickens * * *. The plows used were of wood; not a village could boast of a cart.

Sowing was done by hand; harvesting by the scythe and threshing by animals. Fields were never manured.

Every second year the fields were measured by sticks and ropes and distributed among the cultivators. Division of land always led to strife and bloodshed * * * The yields were very poor * * *. poor

The sanitary conditions in the villages were horrible. Schools id not exist. In passing a village one noticed a large number did not exist. of blind or half-blind persons. Malaria was rampant. Many ruins of villages were scattered over the area * * * deserted by their inhabitants who migrated to the hills.

The Royal Commission found in 1936 a situation vastly different. It reports as follows:

Twelve years ago the National Home was an experiment. Today it is a going concern * * * the process of Jewish agricultural colonization has steadily continued. There are now 203 agricultural settlements containing 97,000 people * * *. These wide stretches of plain land, drained and irrigated, and green citrus trees or brown from the plows are the agrarian basis of the National Home. The country towns have likewise grown and prospered. Tel-Aviv, still a wholly Jewish town, has leaped to the first place among the towns of Palestine. Its population now exceeds 150,000.

From its beginnings the contrast between Tel-Aviv rising so quickly from a barren strip of sand and ancient Jaffa * * * was clearly marked, and it is now quite startling. There is the same effect at Jerusalem. The population of Jerusalem has grown to 125,000; and of that some 76,000 are Jews.

The industrial structure has not entirely outgrown its agrarian

The relation between rural and urban areas, between indus trialists and agriculturists, have remained fairly constant from the start.

The Jewish rural population has grown from 14,782 in 1922 to 98,303 in 1936. Jewish productivity on the land has greatly increased, and cooperative methods in Jewish agriculture have

Increase in absorptive capacity through development of agriculture is indicated by the following:

First. In the beginning settlers were given 250 dunams of land-sufficient to support a family. Now 20 dunams is the rule, because of the greater productivity of irrigated and well-fertilized land.

Second. By importing cows from Holland the yield of a cow was raised from 700 liters a year to 4,000 liters-some cows giving as much as 8,000 liters.

Third. By bringing over new poultry, the Leghorn, from the United States the increase of a hen per year was raised from 70 to 120 eggs.

Fourth. The yield of wheat was raised from 70 kilos a dunam to 130 and 140.

We have introduced new trees, for instance, bananas, many varieties of deciduous fruits. We had here the support of our agricultural station at Rehovot (minutes of evidence, Palestine Royal Commission, London, 1937, p. 103).

Fifth. The export of Palestine citrus fruit had risen from 2,470,000 cases with a value of £P745,000 in the 1930-31 season, to approximately 10,774,000 cases with an approximate value of £P3,900,000 in the 1936-37 season. At that time, Palestine had already achieved third place in the list of the citrus-exporting countries of the world. (Horowitz and Hin-den, Economic Survey in Palestine, p. 70.)

The coming of the Jews provided an expanded market for agricultural products, furnished purchasers for land at high prices, thus enabling the Arab peasants to dispose of surplus land and to utilize the proceeds for the introduction of more productive methods of cultivation on the remainder of their holdings, transformed Palestine agriculture from its primitive pre-war state to present-day standards, enabled the government to make loans and wholesale tax remissions to the Arab peasant as a result of the flourishing state of Palestine's finances, and, most important of all, has given the Arab peasant an object lesson in modern agricultural practice which he has not been slow to adopt. Here again the dynamic principle of economic absorptive capacity has been at work.

Jewish Palestine shows that great creative forces have been generated by the pressure of Jewish misery and by the ageold longing of the Jewish people to normalize Jewish life on their ancient soil in the social framework of the prophets. Under the impact of these forces the static elements which go to make up the physical country called Palestine are adjusting and will continue to adjust themselves to expanding Jewish need. Impelled by these forces, the builders of Jewish Palestine have frequently projected enterprises and employed methods which to orthodox economists appeared "uneconomic." To a British economist, to a member of a British commission, or to a British Government official whose "time sense" is influenced by the security which he and his nation enjoy, haste in the colonization and upbuilding of a new country is naturally "uneconomic." But to a Jew who must help find a home for his wandering brethren an accelerated economic tempo is soundly "economic." Doubtless it was "uneconomic" for the Jews to pay the exorbitant prices of the land which they acquired in Palestine. The growth of the Jewish agricultural and horticultural structure of Palestine tell another story. It was wholly "uneconomic" for a prominent group of Jewish business and professional men in America to aid Moise Novomeysky to attempt the commercial extraction of the mineral resources of the Dead Sea. Expert opinion throughout the world, particularly in Germany, foredoomed this attempt to failure. Today this "most useless body of water in the world" is furnishing work opportunities for 1,500 Jews and Arabs and sustenance for 2,500 dependents. The foundations have been laid for the creation of a great chemical industry, which, it is hoped, will in the course of a generation furnish employment to untold thousands. It was certainly "uneconomic" for Pinhas Rutenberg to project the harnessing of the Jordan for the creation of power for industries and for a land-irrigation system which were nonexistent at the time.

Today Rutenberg's Palestine Electric Corporation has industrially transformed the country. In 1927 this company sold 2,527,126 kilowatt-hours; in 1937, 71,265,000 kilowatt-hours. It was undoubtedly "uneconomic" for the Jews to pay $1,000,000 for a drainage concession of the Huleh Lake and marshes which had been granted before the war by the Ottoman Government to two Beirut merchants and which had been lying dormant, and to plan the expenditure of an additional $3,000,000, plus $1,000,000 to be contributed by the Government, for the drainage and rehabilitation of tha; area of 56,939 dunams. But it is likely to prove highly "economic" when the work is completed and this area plus an additional 46,000 dunams is ameliorated, whereas now it is only a disease-breeding and malarial swamp. Without laboring the point too much, it is perfectly clear to the Jews of the world that it is wholly "economic" for them to apply a small percentage of their total resources to the founding of a home for their brethren who have been so cruelly deprived of every vestige of human dignity. It will still be "economic" if, in the future, it should be found necessary to write off part of the capital which the Jewish people may devote to the intensive development and rehabilitation of Palestine.

It is in the light of the foregoing considerations that it may be reasonably said that Palestine, freed from terror and secure in good government, will carry its share of the Jewish refugee burden by annually absorbing from 100,000 to 125.000

Jews for many years to come.

As I have indicated, the area of Palestine west of the Jordan River and its resources, developed and undeveloped, will support at least 4,000,000 people. East of the Jordan River—that part of Palestine sometimes called Trans-Jordania—has an area of 35,000 square miles, with a population of less than 300,000. Properly cultivated and developed, this territory can easily sustain a million people.

The claim is made by some persons that the Jewish population in Palestine has been injurious to the Arabs. The facts are quite to the contrary. The Arab population has increased since the Balfour Declaration and the mandate given to Great Britain by the League of Nations. The records conclusively demonstrate that the Jewish development of Palestine has materially opened up avenues for an increase in the Arab population, who have taken advantage of the improved economic and industrial conditions. The Arab population in Palestine in 1922 was approximately 600,000. Since then it has increased to nearly 1,000,000. In Egypt, a neighboring and prosperous country, the increase in population during the same period was but 13 percent, as against 40 percent in Palestine.

Reference to the population of Syria and other countries inhabited by Arabs establishes the fact that the population during the period referred to was static. Before the war emigration from Palestine was the rule. Its resources were undeveloped, and the Arabs lived in very primitive conditions. Since the war the immigration into Palestine by Arabs, as I have indicated, has materially increased.

As an illustration, in Jaffa the Arab population has increased since the war by 69 percent. In 1934-35 the Governor of Huran (southern Syria) declared that 30,000 Huranites left for Palestine and settled there.

The improved conditions in Palestine since 1922 have been so remarkable as to induce Arabs in other countries to take residence in Palestine. Wage and health conditions and opportunities for employment—these and other conditions—resulted in a large influx of Arab population from surrounding Arab countries. The average wage in Palestine is 15 piasters, as compared with 4½ elsewhere in the Near East. In 1935, 40 percent of laborers on Jewish plantations were Arabs—7,500 Arabs worked on Jewish plantations, representing, with their dependents, 40,000 souls. Since then there has been an increase in the number of Arabs who have sought employment in industries developed by the Jews and upon Jewish farms and plantations.

The infant mortality among Arabs dropped from 220 per thousand in 1927 to 135 in 1936, the lowest in the entire Near East. The government health budget for 1935 was 166,000 pounds, the Jews receiving only 10,000 pounds. The government educational budget for 1934–35 was 212,000 pounds, of which the Jews received but 34,000 pounds.

It should be stated that the Arab population in 1921–22 contributed but 25 percent to the revenues of the Government, and in 1934–35 only 5 percent, although during this period the standard of living among the Arabs continued to improve. As indicated, the public revenues are derived largely from the Jewish population. By 1935 the Jews had purchased 1,243,000 dunams of land, which is approximately 300,000 acres. The area of Palestine is 26,158,000 dunams; so that the Jews own less than 5 percent of the total area. This refutes the statement sometimes made that the Jews were acquiring all the land to the disadvantage of the Arabs.

The Arab citrus groves increased from 20,000 dunams in 1922 to 130,000 in 1935, representing an investment of £8,000,000, which had been largely derived from the sale of lands to the Jews at high prices. The fact is that a large part of the lands of Palestine were barren and sterile. In the valleys a large part of the lands consisted of swamps and were unavailable for cultivation without drainage at great expense. The Jewish population have acquired from the Government some of the properties to which it succeeded after Turkish control was lost, and have purchased from the Arabs, as I have stated, at very high prices, several hundred thousand dunams. In 1934 the Government assigned the swampy area at Hulah, consisting of 57,000 dunams, to a Jewish company for drainage, it being stipulated that upon reclamation the Arabs were to be given onethird of the area without cost.

There were practically no educational facilities for the Arabs before the war, but now more than 300 schools are maintained by the mandatory for the Arabs. The Arabs have gained materially in improving their agricultural practices and in the greater development of the general economy. This is directly the result of the advent of the Jews and the improved methods of cultivation which they have inaugurated.

Those familiar with Palestine are impressed with the development by the Arab villages near Jewish settlements and the primitive conditions of the unchanged Arab villages elsewhere. Mr. Ettinger, Palestine economic expert, estimates that in 1935, for example, the Jews paid to the Arabs in wages, rents, agricultural products, and so forth, a total of two and one-half million pounds. To this must be added Government expenditures for the benefit of Arabs from revenues obtained from the Jewish population, estimated at from a million to a million and a half pounds. During this same period more than a million pounds were bought by the Arabs from the Jews, taking all forms of transactions into consideration. Thus, in 1 year, a net gain to the Arabs of more than £2.000,000.

Dr. Bonne, another economic expert, estimates that in the same year, 1935, Jews have passed on to Arabs, through various channels, more than three and one-half million pounds. This has been a tremendous factor in the Arab economy. The Jews poured into the Arab economy more money than the total income of all the peasants.

In 1930 Sir John Hope-Simpson made a careful survey of conditions in Palestine, particularly of the so-called landless Arabs. Recently, in his book upon the refugee problem, he stated that the Jews could enter Palestine at the rate of 100,000 a year without detriment to the Arabs or to their economic development.

A British commission, investigating the question of displaced Arabs, reported that throughout the entire period of Jewish development only 32 Arabs were left without land. Between 1919 and 1939 the Arab population increased nearly 100 percent; but, as I have indicated, in adjacent countries there was practically no increase.

The fact is that the economic, cultural, and social benefits from the Jewish settlement and development of Palestine are directly responsible for the increase in the Arab population, lifting it out of indescribable poverty and freeing it from disease and providing it with such health and educational services as are still unavailable to Arabs in contiguous territory.

The claim is made by some that the Arabs in Palestine have opposed Jewish immigration. I have invited attention to the fact that the Arabs in Palestine have greatly benefited by the advent of the Jews and that thousands of them have found employment with the Jews. It is true that a limited number of Arabs belonging to terrorist organizations have, by assassination and intimidation, endeavored to prevent the development of Jewish enterprises, but my information is that these terroristic gangs were not bona fide residents of Palestine and they assailed Arabs who were developing Palestine and cooperating with the Jews as well as the Jews themselves. My information is that they were inspired—in part at least—by German and Italian agents who sought to create strife and precipitate uprisings. There is authority for this view, which comes from the British War Office. In January of this year the British War Office gave out a press release on this subject and according to the report—

The Arab rebellion in Palestine is actually limited to 1,000 to 1,500 men, split up into small bodies * * * and forming the permanent nuclei of rebel gangs. These small parties are reinforced by temporary detachments of armed Fellahin (Arab peasants). * * In parts of the country * * definite detachments with leaders and a quota of arms are in existence. Elsewhere villagers are pressed into service by the permanent gangs * * combining by night for sniping and sabotage—which have become a recognized and remunerative racket. * * * The general policy is more or less directed by the Mufti and the higher Arab committee, but within Palestine the gang leaders are practically independent. * * * The two principal leaders are Abdul Rahim El Haj Mahomed and Aref Abdul Razzik. * * * These two leaders are on such bad terms that on more than one occasion open hostilities have almost broken out between them.

TERROR GRIP RULES ARAB POPULATION

The former has endeavored to conduct his campaign on decent lines and dislikes the campaign of assassination and intimidation waged against all moderate Arabs who might oppose the Mufti's policy. * * *

policy. * * The second is entirely unprincipled. He consequently enjoys the complete confidence of the rebel leaders outside Palestine and is their principal agent in maintaining the terrorist grip on the Arab population. Incidentally he pockets a large rake-off from forced subscriptions to rebel funds. * * The lower class of terrorist "thugs" who by assassination, abduction, and intimidation of all sorts, maintain a grip of terror on the population. * *

subscriptions to rebel funds. * * * The lower class of terrorist "thugs" who by assassination, abduction, and intimidation of all sorts, maintain a grip of terror on the population. * * * The power of the rebellion and the safety of its supporters depend on the terrorism imposed on the population by the man with the gun. * * * Even in the large towns there is little sign that the educated classes combine to give support to the gangs. * * * Owing to terrorism, they are supported by the rest of the popula-

Mr. President, throughout our country, our Jewish friends are now marshaling their strength in order to bring immediate relief to their impoverished, disorganized, broken, and, in many cases, despoiled Jewish communities in European countries-despoiled by the very governments of which they are citizens and by the very peoples that of right ought to give them protection. By their combined efforts, the Jews living in a free democracy such as is ours seek to bring to their fellow coreligionists in other less fortunate portions of the world, strength and a chance for survival until this madness that now possesses Europe shall have passed away, as pass away it must if civilized life is to persist on the earth. To the thousands upon thousands of homeless refugees, stateless people without home or country, the Jews of America offer the only defense against utter despair.

The Jewish tragedy in Europe beggars description. more than a thousand years, for more than half a century even before the discovery of America, Jews had been living in Europe, and particularly in those countries-in Germany, Austria, and Italy-whose dictators and rulers now oppress and disown them. Before these countries had yet accepted the Christian faith Jews were settled there. And throughout the years this people of the Book, had by its toil and by its blood helped to fertilize these newborn kingdoms of the European Continent. Throughout the dark years of the Middle Ages they suffered untold persecution; yet they persevered. Hundreds of thousands succumbed before the cruelty and tyranny of a blind and ignorant age; yet they lived on. Hundreds of thousands more, unable to withstand the penalty of nonconformity on the one hand or the blandishments of conformity on the other, gave up the struggle. Yet their communities grew and continued to grow until they slowly became integrated into the life of every European

The world, too, was growing and learning and expanding its frontiers—economic, social, religious—until it soon was recognized that the Jew not only had a place in Europe, but a right to life and liberty, equally with all the other peoples of the continent. The eighteenth, the nineteenth, the twentieth centuries, with their emphasis on liberty, equality, fraternity, opened the doors of freedom and opportunity to Jew and non-Jew alike. Christian teaching with its emphasis on love of one's neighbor, on brotherhood, on social justice, began to have its influence on rulers and ruled. The world at last gave promise of a better day, where life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness were to be the right of all. The Jew throughout Europe, as everywhere else in the world, gave himself completely and without reservation to this new expression and promise of an unfolding democratic ideal of life and government. He saw in it, not alone his own emancipation, but the emancipation of all mankind. He saw, for the first time, the teachings of his prophets consciously implemented in the institutions of the countries in which he lived. He gave himself to these new European countries with patriotic zeal. He fought and died, achieved and met defeat along with his neighbors-all in a common effort to make the world a better place in which to live.

The Jew asked no special favor. He asked only to be permitted to give of his strength and of his talents, that the well-being of all mankind might be advanced.

And now, in this twentieth century, the Jew, in fact the whole world is told that all this advance along the path of enlightenment and civilized human relationships, is a mistake and a delusion. The Nazi and the Fascist authorities ask us to revert to brutish paganism, to abandon our noblest saints and teachings—the teachings both of Judaism and Christianity—and in their place, in their new Pantheon, to enshrine the Nazi and Fascist leaders. Mad with power and consumed by an ambition, they have not alone enslaved their own people, but made of the Jew a wanderer and an outcast. To him who is of the descendants of Abel they would assign the fate of Cain—that of a homeless wanderer across the earth's surface.

Alone responsible for the present unrest in Europe, brutalizing their own peoples, these totalitarian dictators have leveled their attacks upon Jew and Christian alike—the Jew particularly today; tomorrow the Catholic; next day 'the Lutheran; and the following day the Protestant. All come under the condemnation of Hitlerism and fascism.

Because of his greater vulnerability, because he can be singled out as the chief scapegoat for all the world's ills, the fate of the Jew is especially tragic. Wanderers, men, women, children, old and young, are mercilessly driven from the homes that have been theirs and their fathers' for centuries, for no better reason than that the leaders covet their wealth, and even their poverty. Though we read the harrowing details in the daily press, we do not realize nor fully appreciate what this wandering means for the thousands upon thousands of refugees—that miserable multitude dumped, as it were, upon the mercy of the world. Consider the tragic lot of some who, driven from Germany, fled to Austria, then to Sudetenland, then to Czechoslovakia, and then to Italy, and are now expelled from Italy and are literally adrift on boats on the Mediterranean, with all doors shut to them.

Not alone our Jewish friends in America, but every true Christian, every true follower of the Prince of Peace, should be equally concerned for these victimized, abandoned, and helplessly impoverished Jews of Europe. As Senators know, there are approximately 3,000,000 in Poland and 600,000 still in Germany, to say nothing of 500,000 or 600,000 who, through intermarriage are perhaps one-eighth Jewish blood; and yet they come under the ban and are subject to the same penalties and ostracisms visited upon those of wholly Jewish blood. In other European countries hundreds of thousands are subject to merciless persecution at the hands of governments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to take this occasion to compliment the Senator for raising his voice in behalf of persecuted peoples, and to express the sympathy which nearly all fairminded and broad-minded Americans entertain toward the plight of these unhappy people. I am not surprised at the Senator giving expression to the sentiments which he has expressed. Ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, year in and year out, he has raised his voice in eloquent protests against persecution and in sympathy with the downtrodden and the oppressed in every corner and part of the world, regardless of race, creed, or color. I wish to join with him in extending and expressing sympathy.

I should like to inquire of him whether or not he has thought out any practical steps which we could take to be helpful in the situation. Perhaps he is coming to that problem later in his speech. If so, I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, first permit me to express my appreciation for the generous expressions of the Senator with respect to my feeble efforts upon various occasions to protect and defend the oppressed and downtrodden, regardless of race, creed, or nationality. I have raised my voice when I believed that policies were being pursued that were unjust and oppressive; and I have condemned the policies of the Nazi Government in its merciless and, indeed, diabolical persecution of the Jews.

Answering the inquiry of the Senator concerning the steps to be taken to meet the situation, may I say that I have given some thought to the development of a plan which would alleviate the suffering of the Jews and aid them in finding suitable places for their development. I confess that I have not reached any satisfactory conclusion. I do feel, however, that the civilized nations should protest against the wicked and brutal activities of the Nazi Government which are destroying the intellectuals, robbing and plundering those with property, and condemning to penury and want, if not destruction, hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children.

Mr. WALSH. However, I think the very fact that the Senator raises his voice in the Senate has an influence and effect upon the formation of public opinion throughout the world, and may result in a lessening of persecutions and hasten the end of the denial of civic and religious rights to minorities.

Mr. KING. I again express my thanks to the Senator for his kind reference to my efforts. I am happy to know that the Senator from Massachusetts, in the dark days of persecutions of the Armenians, Jews, and other minorities lifted his eloquent voice in their behalf and protested against wrongs to which they were subjected.

May I repeat what I have stated, that our Government has taken cognizance of the tragic situation of the Jews and has regarded the Balfour Declaration, supplemented by the Treaty of 1924, as justification for its interposition in a proper way to lift the heavy hand of persecution from those who were afflicted.

Our Government, as well as the American people, has been interested in the development of Palestine as a national home for the Jews. And the American people, Jews and non-Jews, have made contributions for the rehabilitation of Palestine—the building of hospitals, schools, and the advancement of policies and measures conducive to the welfare not only of the Jews in Palestine but of the Arabs.

Great Britain, in assuming the mandate, assumed a heavy responsibility. There has been much criticism of the methods employed by the British Government in executing the mandate. It has been believed by many that it has not been duly considerate of the Jews and the great constructive work in which they have been and are engaged, in fashioning Palestine into a reasonably prosperous, modern government. There has been, I fear, extraneous consideration, which has influenced the British Government to the extent that it has not exercised as it should have done its authority in suppressing the terroristic activities of a small group of Arabs, who have attempted to thwart the work of the Jews and to nullify the provisions of the mandate.

When in Palestine a few years ago I was witness to the remarkable developments—economically and industrially—in the Holy Land. I saw what had been accomplished in converting sterile lands and swamps and rocky ridges and hills into fields and groves and productive lands. I saw the towns and cities which had been and were being erected, and the successful efforts to convert barren wastes and infertile lands into promising fields and homes.

As I have indicated, Great Britain has not always cooperated with the Jews who were rightfully in Palestine, and to that extent has not carried out, in letter and in spirit, the terms of the mandate.

The question arises, If the Jews are denied access to Palestine, where may they go? The bars are being erected against them in European nations, and for that matter, in other nations. Palestine was promised to them as a homeland. The persecutions to which they are subjected in Germany and in other countries was taken cognizance of by our Government as well as by others, and more than a year ago a committee was selected from 30 nations to take council with a view to ascertaining what could be done, what plan might be developed and carried into execution, which would mitigate some of the horrors to which the Jews were subjected by the Hitler regime. The evidence was conclusive that thousands were being sent to concentration camps; that the intellectuals were being subjected to the most brutal and inhuman treatment; and that, as a result of the hideous wrongs inflicted upon the Jews and other minorities, thousands of them prematurely lost their lives. The committee of nations met and attempted to formulate a plan; but nothing thus far has been successfully accomplished.

And now the White Paper seeks to destroy the only place of refuge for the Jews, who are proscribed and hounded and subjected to the most horrible brutalities. They are despoiled of their property; their sanctuaries have been burned; their holy books have been destroyed; and Germany now, under the Nazi regime, manifests those atavistic qualities that were apparent in barbarous ages of the past.

It is true that during past months Christian leaders and leaders of all our democracies have expressed great sympathy for these homeless wanderers. They have urged one place after another as a possible refuge. They have suggested numerous corners of the earth. In Africa, in South America, in Alaska, as possible havens of refuge. The former German colony Tanganyika, Kenya, Uganda, Madagascar, sections of the East Indies, British Guiana, lower California, northern Canada, and Alaska have all been proposed by friends or pseudo friends of the persecuted Jews. Many of the places mentioned have been investigated and are still under investigation by commissions of one kind or another; but, after all these months of discussion it has become clearly evident that one after another they are found wanting and incapable of immediately receiving any reasonable number of these wandering Jews. Obstacles that would take years and millions of dollars to overcome present themselves in relation to every proposal. As an example, British Guiana that only a few years ago was found by a responsible commission as impractical for the settlement of Assyrian refugees, some poor people who had been driven by the Fascist government out of Abyssinia, is now seriously advanced as a haven for the Jew. I submit it is unjust and cruel to propose these will-o'-the-wisps for a people that is now sunk to the lowest depths of despair. It is dishonest seriously to talk about proposals that will take years and years and years to develop while what is needed to relieve the present inhuman situation is to find for the Jews homes today. Rather than waste our sympathies and our efforts on these ill-considered proposals, let us concentrate our attention and the attention of the whole world, our strength and the strength of the whole world, upon the one place on this earth that has already in very great measure offered and that continues to offer the only possible and practical solution. While these various territories have been suggested as possible centers of colonization for Jews, Palestine in the empty Near East offers an actual center of Jewish colonization and is the best answer to the question, Where shall they go?

I might add that when in Palestine I investigated the resources of Transjordania. There is a vast area there in which at least 1,000,000 people might find habitation. We all know that the historian Josephus reported that there were 4,000,000 Jews in Palestine in his day, as I recall.

If we wish to contribute an honest solution to Jewish homelessness, let us unite on this single project, because, in our own time. Palestine has proved its capacity to receive and to provide the opportunities of life for many thousands of pogromized Jews. I submit that Palestine is the answer, because in the last 40 years the Jews have poured into the land $500,000,000, and have with their money, their sweat, and their blood changed Palestine from a barren, backward land to a fertile country. They have developed arid wastes, built cities and towns, and erected educational institutions. Approximately 500,000 Jews are now living there in a condition of advanced civilization. Largely because by the development of Palestine, the Jews have opened up widened economic frontiers for the whole Near East, because Palestine is the most readily accessible, easily reached country open for refugee colonization, because Palestine, historically, has been the home of the Jewish people from the Bible times until this day, because 52 nations, including our own, have recognized this historic claim of the Jewish people to Palestine, and solemnly affirmed the right of the Jews to settle there, because all these accomplishments have been to the advantage of the whole population, Jew and Arab alike-for all these reasons and for many more, which I might take time to enumerate, we ought seriously to direct our attention and our effort to the Holy Land and to the right of the Jews to occupy that far-off territory.

Of all those who have migrated since 1933-since the advent of Hitler-from the pestilential centers of Europe, more than half, more than 200,000, have gone to Palestine. This little country in the Near East, the ancient land of Israel, has proved the equal—nay, more than the equal—of all the other countries of the world combined, in its capacity and readiness to receive and to absorb the homeless Jew. Here in Palestine, in the land of his fathers, in the land of his future, he ceases to be a wanderer. Here he takes firm root. Here the Jew builds for himself and for his children, with dignity and with permanence. Here he establishes his economy and his culture, his faith and his religion, so that it cannot be moved. Here at last he returns to his Jerusalem and to his promised land-and calls it home.

Nearly 500,000 Jews are, as I have said, now in Palestine, for the most part-particularly the new arrivals-a youthful generation with the will to build in a hard land, and with the capacity to withstand rigors of every kindbuilding not alone for themselves, but the many, many thousands more, they hope and know that Palestine can and will absorb. They are creating there from day to day wider possibilities for refugee immigration. By the expansion of agriculture, industry, and commerce they are enlarging the absorptive capacity of the land so that serious and authentic surveys recently made reveal that the country can receive at least 100,000 new settlers the coming year and in the very reasonable future, can receive as much as another two or three million. In the face of all this it is dishonest and sinful and stupid and ridiculous to suggest undeveloped, unprepared African and South American wastes. In the face of the possibilities that the Jewish people has created in Palestine and in the whole Near East, what a tragic blunder it is to distract and to divert their attention and our attention to such ephemeral schemes as Tanganyika and British Guiana.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to say how inspiring I think the Senator's address has been. I am one of those who had a great deal of hope as a result of the Balfour declaration. It seemed to me it was a great step forward in human history; and by the same reasoning the change of policy which has recently been evidenced must be a great step backward. I share the view of the Senator from Utah as to the appropriateness and fitness of setting up Palestine as a home for the Jewish people. I am grateful for what he has already said, and I shall certainly be interested and appreciative if he will indicate to me or to the Senate what our Government can do at this critical time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would expect such expressions from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. He is the grandson, if he will pardon me for being personal, of a great Senator who exhibited a profound interest in the formulation and the bringing into life of the so-called Balfour declaration. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge was deeply interested in the solution of the Jewish question. With his knowledge of history he perceived that the time might come when some nation would develop an anti-Semetic spirit which would result in a denial of rights to which Jews were entitled. He joined in securing the adoption by the Senate of the United States of the Balfour declaration. My recollection is that he introduced the resolution into the Senate. I do not think there was a single vote in opposition to it. I regret that this declaration, which was a solemn covenant upon the part of Great Britain, is being broken, and the Jewish homeland is being denied the protection which is guaranteed in this mandate and in the guarantees of the Allies and associated powers.

With the millions that the Jews are pouring into Palestine they buy land, they build roads, they open schools, they provide hospitals, they drain swamps, they reclaim land, they dig irrigation ditches, they plant orchards, they construct homes, they tap new water sources, they provide and give innumerable services, including assistance to new immigrants-all in a gigantic effort to bring Jews to Palestine and to prepare Palestine for the Jew. Daily, through their combined work, the two outstanding Zionist and Jewish organizations-the Jewish National Fund and the Foundation Fund—create ever larger opportunities for immigration into Palestine. Every dollar they collect from the Jews of America and from Jews in all other portions of the world these organizations spend in a constructive effort to reclaim the Holy Land and to reconstitute life anew for the homeless, driven children of Israel of continental Europe.

Palestine challenges not alone the Jew but the whole Christian world as the one bright constructive and promising achievement of our present generation. In Palestine the Jew has come and remains—none can dislodge him—and remains as of right and not by sufferance. Here the Jew has learned to sow and to reap, to plant and to harvest, and, what is most important of all, to feel—actually to feel that it is his own.

The Jewish people have wrought a miracle in Palestine, a miracle made possible only by a lavish outpouring of love for the very soil of a land sanctified by the presence of their There their patriarchs, Abraham, seers and prophets. Isaac, and Jacob, had made their home, if only for awhile. There they had been promised the land of Canaan, and there today they are buried. There Moses and Joshua, David and Solomon, Amos and Hosea, Jeremiah and Isaiah, and that whole great company of prophets, had lived, taught, and died. There, too, Judas Maccabeus had rallied his people in defense of their sacred soil and for the preservation of the Hebrew faith. There in Palestine every inch of soil is made holy by the blood of martyrs; every stone, every marker, every mountain, every valley, every river and stream, is filled with memories, rich, and meaningful.

Is it any wonder, then, that the Jews love Palestine? Is it any wonder, then, that they can create in Palestine miracles and surmount untold difficulties? Is it any wonder, then, that in Palestine Jewish genius and Jewish love can make possible what seems impossible elsewhere in the World? Palestine for them is no longer a dream and a vision, but a reality. They have made it so.

It is this fact of modern Palestine, with its present potentialities for colonization and opportunities for expansion, that I submit for consideration and for the consideration of all those who earnestly seek a solution for the homelessness of the Jew today.

In my opinion, the efforts of those who seek to aleviate the sorrows of the Jews, should, for the present at least, be devoted to preserving the Holy Land as a national home for them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks a statement by Dr. Solomon Goldman, chairman of the National Emergency Committee on Palestine and president of the Zionist Organization of America. It has been given to the press, as I understand, and I ask to have it inserted in the Record as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY DR. SOLOMON GOLDMAN, CHAIRMAN, NATIONAL EMERGENCY COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE, AND PRESIDENT, ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF AMERICA, AT WASHINGTON PRESS CONFERENCE, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1939

American Jewry is dismayed to find that the British Government, which was moved by a sense of justice and humanity two decades ago to give to the Jewish people a promise for the reestablishment of the Jewish National Home in Palestine, has now seen fit, in a period of gravest crisis and need for the Jews in many lands of persecution, to revoke that promise and in this very act give sad evidence of the bankruptcy of civilization and the triumph of might over right, terror over heroic self-restraint.

The issuance of the Chamberlain White Paper represents a uni-

The issuance of the Chamberlain White Paper represents a unilateral action of nullification of pledges made to the Jewish people on behalf of the entire civilized world. Great Britain's decision to stop Jewish immigration into Palestine after 1944 and thereafter freeze the Jewish population to a permanent minority status is tantamount to the creation in Palestine of another ghetto. There the rights of the Jews guaranteed in the mandate by 52 nations of the world, including the United States, will be handed over for safekeeping to an Arab majority supported in its terroristic activities by the very dictator countries which have sought to destroy the Jews in Palestine and in every country of the world.

ties by the very dictator countries which have sought to destroy the Jews in Palestine and in every country of the world.

Great Britain's policy of appeasement in Palestine, of yielding to Arab terrorism on the one hand, and pressure from the totalitarian states on the other, will add the Jewish community of Palestine to the other victims of power politics. The White Paper asserts that an effort will be made to safeguard Jewish rights under the new plan for an independent state in Palestine. If Great Britain has now determined to scrap the solemn pledges contained in the Balfour declaration and the League of Nations mandate, to what extent can the Jews today rely on Britain's promise that their future status in Palestine will not be further imperiled by progressive shrinkage of their rights?

promise that their future status in Palestine will not be further imperiled by progressive shrinkage of their rights?

As Americans and as Jews who have a deep sympathy and friendship for the British people, we refuse to believe that the White Paper reflects the considered sentiment of public opinion in England. We believe that the action of the Chamberlain government clearly and ruthlessly violates the policies with regard to Palestine established and defined over a period of more than 2 decades by successive governments of Great Britain. We believe, moreover, that the present decision will gravely complicate and jeopardize any solution of the refugee problem. During the past 6 years Palestine has been the major center for Jewish refugee migration, having absorbed more than 210,000 Jews from Germany, Austria, Poland, Rumania, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and other countries. This figure represents a larger Jewish immigration than to all other countries in the world combined during the same period. More than 60,000 of these settlers came from Germany after the advent of the Nazi regime.

The White Paper stipulates that a maximum of 75,000 Jews will be permitted to enter Palestine within the next 5 years. This cannot but be interpreted as a sharp political reduction having no relationship to the principle of economic absorptive capacity recognized as the governing measure of Jewish immigration into Palestine. In 1935 a total of 61,435 Jews entered Palestine. The present economic absorptive capacity, despite the disturbances of the past 3 years, warrants the admission of at least an equally large number during the next 12 months. During the past two decades Palestine has established a unique record as homeland and refuge. There are today more than 475,000 Jews in Palestine. In line with the principle of going back to the land some 120,000 of them are engaged in agricultural pursuits while 40,000 are employed in industry. Thirty-eight new agricultural settlements have been founded in the past 3 years, bringing to a total of 250 the chain of Jewish colonies that have converted to a flourishing land of plenty what two decades ago were arid wastes or pestilential swamps. Many industries have been founded by the Jewish pioneers. A great Jewish metropolis has risen on the shores of the Mediterranean—Tel Aviv—with a population of 176,000. The self-sacrifice and heroic labors of the Jewish builders and settlers have redounded to the benefit of all the inhabitants of the country. Arabs who lived in indescribable poverty prior to Jewish development have had their living standards raised, their conditions of health improved to such an extent that a large-scale Arab immigration has taken place from neighboring countries.

health improved to such an extent that a large-scale Arab immigration has taken place from neighboring countries.

Throughout the past 3 years of disorder the Jews have steadfastly refrained from any acts of retaliation or violence. They have stood guard over their communities side by side with British soldiers, placing their faith in the justice and humanity of the British Government and the civilized world at large. It is those heroic pioneers who have transformed Palestine into a land of promise and uncovered rich possibilities for its fulfillment who are now being penalized by the White Paper.

This courageous, pioneering spirit that has wrung hope and faith from solid rock and dry dust and thrown into the teeth of the oppressors of the Jewish people a glowing record of Jewish creative achievement will not be trampled under foot without a struggle. The Jews of the lands of persecution, the Jews without homes in the no-man's lands of Europe, whose spirits have been nurtured by the proud record of Palestine progress, will not permit their last ray of hope to be destroyed. Their prayers will go out for a strong and brave stand by the Jewish men and women in Palestine. In the ghettos of Europe the Jew cannot defend himself against the ravages of anti-Semitism. In Palestine the young, sturdy pioneers must preserve not only their rights but the rights of those defenseless Jews in European lands to come to Palestine and to share in the revival of the Jewish people and the rehabilitation of the broken Jewish body and soul.

All Americans will be deeply disappointed at the action of the British Government, for the people and Government of the United States have had an important role in the shaping of the Balfour Declaration and the League of Nations mandate as the expression of their concern over the suffering of the Jewish people and the need for rebuilding the Jewish homeland in Palestine as a means of restoring a measure of hope and faith to this perse-cuted people. As early as 1917, when the Balfour Declaration was being drafted, President Wilson was constantly consulted and the final draft was submitted to him for approval before it was issued by the British Government on November 2, 1917. declaration was ratified by a joint resolution of Congress on June 30, 1922. The American-British Convention of December 3, 1924, 30, 1922. The American-British Convention of December 3, 1924, was a treaty between the United States and Great Britain in which the United States gave its consent to the mandate of the League of Nations. Article seven of this convention provides:

"Nothing contained in the present convention shall be affected by any modification which may be made in the terms of the mandate, as recited above, unless such modification shall have been assented to by the United States."

In the light of this undertaking American Jewry appeals to the President of the United States and to Secretary of State Hull the President of the United States and to Secretary of State Hull to intercede in the present situation to prevent the unilateral abrogation of this treaty through the nullification of the mandate. On October 14, 1938, Secretary Hull issued a statement on the Palestine question in which he said:

"It is expected that this Government will have an opportunity to submit its views to the British Government with respect to any changes affecting American rights which may be proposed in the

Palestine Mandate.'

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN EDUCATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few brief remarks on an amendment offered by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] and myself to Senate bill 1305. The bill is designed to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education. I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Davis and Mr. Wagner to Senate bill 1305 was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 4, line 17, after the period insert the following new sentence: "For each of such fiscal years there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, for use exclusively in connection with nursery schools and kindergartens, an additional sum equal to 10 percent of the sum otherwise authorized to be appropriated by this section for each such fiscal year.'

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am glad I had an opportunity to participate in the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection called by President Hoover, which assembled in Washington on November 19, 1930, with 3,000 men and women-leaders in the medical, educational, and social fields as they touch the life of the child-in attendance. This was the third conference on child welfare, the first having been summoned by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1910, and the second by President Woodrow Wilson in 1919. The stimulus of the first conference led to the organization of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor in 1912. The results of both of these earlier conferences were broad and farreaching. The third conference included the subjects in the two former conferences, but the range was enlarged to take in not only the dependent child or the child in special need of protection but all children, including those social and environmental factors which are influencing modern childhood.

Mr. President, I wish time would permit me to read all of the children's charter that was promulgated in 1930, recognizing the rights of the child as the first rights of citizenship. I shall not read all of its provisions, but wish to refer briefly to section 8:

For every child a school which is safe from hazards, sanitary, properly equipped, lighted, and ventilated. For younger children nursery schools and kindergartens to supplement home care,

Surely this is an urgent need. It is the first right of citizenship, but is now tragically neglected. Even back in the comparatively prosperous days of the last decade, of the 45,000,000 children in the United States, 6,000,000 were accounted as improperly nourished, 1,000,000 having defective speech, 1,000,000 with weak or damaged hearts, 675,000 having present behavior problems, 450,000 mentally retarded, 382,000 tubercular, 3,000,000 having impaired hearing, 300,000 crippled, 50,000 partially blind, 200,000 delinquent, and 500,000 as dependent, and so on, at that time to a total of at least 10,000,000 deficients, more than 80 percent of whom were not receiving the necessary attention, though our knowledge and experience show that these deficiencies can be prevented and remedied to a high degree.

I am convinced that after this decade of depression, conditions for American children have not materially improved. There remain at least 25 percent who are ill-housed, illclothed, and ill-fed; and a much larger percentage are deprived of the benefits of pregrade education in nurseries and kindergartens, for which I am speaking today.

Mr. President, the typical public-school system in the United States provides 8 years in the elementary school, and 4 years in the high school. Beyond these units are commonly found the 4-year college and the professional and graduate schools of the university, offering advanced work for 3 or 4 additional years. This pattern is rapidly being mcdified. The common-school program now extends from the nursery school and kindergarten through the junior college. Instead of the traditional organization, many communities are now organizing their school system in three major units. The first includes the nursery school and kindergarten and the first 6 years of the common-school program; the second a 4-year program of continued general education; and the third a 4-year unit, an important function of which is the differentiation of courses in line with the vocational outlook of the more mature boys and girls enrolled in it.

During the period of transition in which we now find ourselves, a great variety of organization still exists. In some communities we have the kindergarten and the first two grades organized as a primary school; in others the nursery school and kindergarten and the first 6 years of the common school are organized as the elementary school. Beyond this period the variations consist of three types of organization: (1) A 3-year junior high school, a 3-year senior high school, and a 2-year junior college; or (2) a 6-year high school and a 2-year junior college; or (3) the organization suggested above, which consists of an elementary school carrying children to approximately 12 or 13 years of age, followed by two units of 4 years each, which complete the common-school program at approximately 20 years of age.

Mr. President, in many local administrative areas in the United States a 1- or 2-year kindergarten enrolling children 4 and 5 years of age is included as a part of the elementary school. In fewer centers the nursery school, admitting children at 21/2 to 3 years of age, has been provided for some children. It is commonly accepted that the first 2 years of the traditional elementary school, enrolling children 6 and 7 years of age, are more closely related to the work of the kindergarten and nursery school than to the upper years of the elementary school. For this reason a primary or junior school, combining the nursery school, kindergarten, and first two elementary grades, has been proposed as an important unit in the educational system.

It is common practice in the United States to admit children to kindergarten or the first grade on the basis of their chronological ages. These vary in the kindergarten from 4 to 5 years of age, and for entrance to the first grade from 5 to 7 years of age. Lifelong habits and attitudes are formed during the pregrade years, and yet only one child in eight may go to kindergarten. The State laws were passed before the value of the kindergarten years and methods was known. The States have been slow in recognizing the fundamental values of pregrade education. Local people try year after year to get kindergartens in their public schools. They try to get better State laws. There has been altogether too little success. Many of those who now hold administrative positions or governmental authority never went to kindergarten, and lack an understanding of its high values.

Mr. President, with only a small annual appropriation, the Children's Bureau in the United States Department of Labor, with which I was connected for so many years, has led in research, in administrative demonstration, in cooperation with State and local agencies, and in its teaching of the need for a unified approach to the problems of childhood. I want to make it clear that in my opinion this is a national as well as a State and local problem. If any subject is endowed with national interest, it is the welfare of the Nation's children. The Nation's future existence, the intelligent use of its resources, the role it will play in the world, depend on its children—whether or not they are physically fit, and whether or not they are trained in self-control, in respect for the rights of others, and in an understanding of their own rights and obligations.

Since the training of the young child for health is a function that involves his entire handling, rather than the giving of formal instruction, no separation can be made of health education and general care and training. Herein lies the basic importance of nursery schools and kindergartens. The outstanding problem of this period is the establishment of basic habits of physical care and of attitudes and adjustments toward objects and persons. The physical and mental health of later years is built on the foundations of these early years, and the widest possible recognition should be accorded this most important period. One of the many recommendations appearing in the report of the Regents' Inquiry Into the Character and Cost of Public Education in the State of New York recently was the insistence that pregrade or kindergarten work should be a part of the regular school program.

Mr. President, the obligation of the Federal Government to provide increased support for the schools is based not only upon the need of the several States, but also upon the unity which exists in our economic structure. No State or locality maintains itself. Each community throughout the Nation finds itself dependent upon all parts of the country. An important factor in the development of the interdependence of all sections of the country has been the financing of our economic enterprises. This has been recognized in countless ways through the legislation enacted in the last 20 years. An outstanding characteristic of our modern life is found in the mobility of our population. Boys and girls who go to school in rural areas may spend their adult lives in cities. Large numbers of adults migrate with their families from one section of the country to another. There is no large city in the United States which has a birth rate sufficient to maintain its population. It is, therefore, apparent that the economic and social development of every section of the country is dependent upon the provision made for education it. I can see no reason why the doctrine should be accepted that the distribution of Federal money to the States necessarily carries with it the control of education by the Central Government.

The issue of Federal control needs to be fully explored. In rare instances Federal legislation has definitely provided for control by a Federal agency. In many areas of the country in which funds from the Federal Government have been made available to the States there has been a requirement that a plan for the conduct of the services supported by Federal appropriations be submitted by the State author-in each of the several States. However, the danger of Federal control of education must be recognized. I do not favor ity to Federal officials as a preliminary step before funds are allocated.

The Social Security Act operates on this principle. Such provisions as are at present operating seem to have resulted primarily in encouraging State officials to maintain a high standard of service, and in acquainting them with good practices as carried on in other States and as proposed by the Federal authority. So long as the requirement of the submission of plans results in effecting the purpose of the Federal eral grant, and does not lead to control in the organization of schools, I can consistently support this procedure.

Mr. President, I know of no field of education that holds a larger promise of social usefulness and educational benefits than nursery schools and kindergartens. My position on this bill will be governed very largely by the action taken on the amendment which the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] and I have jointly proposed. I believe no appropriation made in Congress during this decade could prove more beneficial to the Nation than that contemplated in this amendment. If any part of this proposal deserves consideration, I believe it is this part, which will enable formal education in the United States, starting with the pregrade school child, to make its full contribution to the youth of the Nation.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2878) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I notice that accompanying the pending naval bill is a report of 46 pages, and I venture to say that not one Member of the Senate has read the report, except possibly the chairman of the committee. Of course, the bill does not carry such a large appropriation, only $54,674,500. That, together with the appropriations made yesterday for the naval service, makes a total of $828,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the reason why the report is so lengthy is that there are some 56 distinct items, and the report covers each one.

Mr. FRAZIER. I appreciate that; but the fact is that a bill, accompanied by a report of 46 pages, is being passed in about 3 minutes; and I do not believe any Member of the Senate, outside of the chairman of the committee, has read the report. It is a sort of a "pork barrel" affair. It carries appropriations for a great many places. I notice, for instance, that there is an appropriation for the navy yard at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, in the amount of $8,485,000. It may be perfectly justified, but I cannot see the justification. In these times, when we are having such difficulty in providing money to take care of the unemployed and others who must be taken care of, it is rather strange to me that we should appropriate eight and a half million dollars for improvements at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Then there is the navy yard at Puget Sound, Wash., $3,000,000. I am giving only a few of the larger items. There is the marine barracks at Parris Island, S. C., $3,000,000 plus. There is the Marine Corps depot of supplies at Philadelphia, $1,300,000. There is the naval hospital at Guam, $47,000. I think that in the regular appropriation bill yesterday there was an appropriation for the hospital at Guam. Then there is an appropriation for the naval hospital at Pearl Harbor of $105,000, which is in addition to the eight and a half million to which I have referred. In the city of Oakland, Calif., there is to be construction work at a cost not to exceed $6,500,000. It is quite a "pork barrel" proposition for the city of Oakland, just across the bay from San Francisco. Then San Francisco has a nice little item also, which will help out a good deal on the West coast.

There is an appropriation for the navy yard at Mare Island, Calif., of $6,000,000. But that does not mean much, either. For New York Harbor and vicinity, $3,500,000 is to be appropriated for improvements. And so on.

It seems rather out of place to pass a bill in 3 or 4 minutes carrying such appropriations and accompanied by such a lengthy report. Inasmuch as we have not had time to read the report, I shall ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

I do not believe there is any use making any objection, because this is one of the Navy bills, which go through as ordered. Nevertheless, I could not refrain from saying a few words in regard to it. It seems to me that we are putting our country into a military frame of mind. We are becoming more military conscious than ever before, spending more money than we have ever spent in peacetime for naval and military purposes, setting an example to other countries to spend like amounts.

As was stated here yesterday, this policy will lead to the bankruptcy of our own Nation and many other nations if it shall continue. I cannot help feeling that way about it. I think there should be a more detailed explanation of the bill; but I shall not make further objection.

I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report (No. 390) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The projects are those which have been given high priority by the Navy Department. The items authorized by the bill are a part of a studied and necessary development of the naval shore establishment and are considered necessary for the support of the naval forces.

THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The committee amended the bill to include two other measures pending before the Congress of great importance to the Navy Department's public-works program. These are:

(a) A measure to authorize the acquisition of the Hunters Point drydocks in San Francisco Bay, as represented by the bill H. R.

5766: and

(b) A measure to provide for the construction of a drydock in New York Harbor, as represented by the bills S. 1939 and H. R. 5331. The committee also amended the bill authorizing the construction of a chapel at the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., at an estimated cost of $150,000 and authorizing the employment of such employees now carried on the rolls as will be required for the preparation of plans and specifications and administrative work in connection with the public-works and public-utilities projects authorized by this act or heretofore otherwise authorized.

HUNTERS POINT DRYDOCKS

Section 4 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, the two graving drydocks situated on San Francisco Bay and known as the Hunters Point drydocks and approximately 48 acres of adjoining land and improvements thereon and to construct on said land an assembly building, storehouse, latrine, and galley, and accessories to each and to provide a quay wall and weight-handling facilities, all to constitute an annex of the Navy Yard, Mare Island, Calif., and to be operated under the direction of the commandant of said navy yard, and to cost not to exceed $6,000,000.

It provides that appropriations authorized by this act shall not be used to duplicate at Hunters Point any manufacturing, construction, or repair facilities available at the Navy Yard, Mare Island, Calif., except as specifically authorized and that no such duplicate facilities shall be provided hereafter unless specifically authorized by law.

The desirability of acquiring the Hunters Point drydocks and operating them under naval control has been evident ever since the large dock was completed in 1918.

On March 25, 1939, a board of naval officers was appointed to investigate and report upon the desirability of acquiring these docks. The following is a summary of the board's conclusions and recommendations:

"After due consideration of all the information and evidence which was obtained relative to the subject matter of the investigation, the board has reached the following conclusions:

"1. That, for the purposes of the national defense, there is need for and the Navy should acquire the Hunters Point drydocks property as soon as possible, and thereafter prosecute a program of improvements and additions thereto, as indicated hereafter in paragraph 34 of this report, which will render these drydocks capable of being utilized to their full capacity as an annex to the United States Navy Yard, Mare Island, Calif.

"2. That, considering the appraised valuation contained in the report of the board's appraisers and making allowance for possible increases therein which might be sustained in condemnation proceedings as well as an allowance for 'going concern' value, $3,500,000 constitutes the maximum sum of money which should be expended by the Government for the acquisition of this property, "Accordingly, the board respectfully submits its recommendations

DRYDOCK IN NEW YORK HARBOR

Section 5 of the bill provides for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock of sufficient size and capacity to accom-modate the largest naval or merchant vessel built, building, or proposed. It permits the United States to bear one-half of the cost of the proposed dock, including the cost of the site and accessories, but not to exceed $3,500,000, in return for which the United States would obtain the use of the dock in a preferred status for its men-of-war and for its largest merchant vessels.

ontain the use of the dock in a preferred status for its men-of-war and for its largest merchant vessels.

The need for a drydock in New York Harbor capable of accommodating the largest commercial vessel afloat or projected has long been recognized and has been strongly advocated by shipping interests and public officials.

There are only four naval drydocks on the east coast that can take a modern battleship. These are at South Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk. However, only three of these docks can take the proposed 45,000-ton battleships, and these are at South Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk. At South Boston there are no shops, while at Philadelphia the controlling depth of the channel is only 36 feet. Therefore, the only naval dock which would be ready and fully equipped at all times to go to work on such a battleship needing repairs quickly is at Norfolk.

The situation with respect to commercial docking facilities is worse. There is not a single commercial dock on the east coast that will take a modern battleship. The two biggest docks are the Todd dock at South Brooklyn, and the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.'s dock at Newport News, Va. The former has an entrance width of only 89 feet with a 32-foot depth over the sill, and the latter has an entrance width of 87 feet with a 30-foot depth over the sill. It is highly desirable that there be in New York Harbor a clock, either commercial or naval, which can accommodate the layest vessel vessel were a series and the series of the commercial control of the layest vessel vessel vessel entered cell. a dock, either commercial or naval, which can accommodate the largest vessel now making New York as a regular port of call. There are 12 such vessels now in commission, and 1 under con-There are 12 such vessels now in commission, and 1 under construction, which cannot be accommodated in any drydock (naval or commercial) in New York Harbor. In addition to the necessity for a drydock in New York Harbor which can accommodate the largest commercial vessel of any nationality, now built or projected, consideration must be given for the need of such a dock in connection with the Navy's shipbuilding program. The principle having been established that a battleship should be launched only the relative and windows which could dook here in having been established that a battleship should be launched only if there is in the vicinity a drydock which could dock her immediately after launching, such a dock must be provided in New York Harbor or a large part of the investment in the New York Navy Yard, which is designed primarily to build battleships, will be lost.

The Navy's three battleship-building yards are New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk. At both Philadelphia and Norfolk, drydocks of sufficient capacity for the new 45,000-ton battleships are available. Unless the Navy is prepared to relegate the New York Navy Yard to the position of a secondary yard, and to lose the value of the large investment in battleship-building facilities at that yard, there must be constructed in New York Harbor a drydock sufficiently large to accommodate the 45,000-ton battleships.

The bill provides that the private corporation maintain the dock

The bill provides that the private corporation maintain the dock at its own expense and that preferential service be given to naval and other public vessels of the United States and to commercial vessels owned by the United States or by a corporation of which the majority of the stock is owned by the United States. It also provides for a reduction in docking charges in the case of public vessels that will be accommodated in the proposed dock.

The committee is of the opinion that it is of the greatest importance to provide in New York Harbor, at the earliest practicable date, a drydock with dimensions and structural strength sufficient to accommodate (a) the largest merchant vessels of any nationality now built or planned, (b) the 45,000-ton battleships now projected, and (c) any vessel which would be able to traverse the proposed new locks for the Panama Canal.

The construction of this dock will serve the following purposes:

The construction of this dock will serve the following purposes:
(a) It will permit the Navy to proceed with the construction of a 45,000-ton battleship in the New York Navy Yard, and will permit the continued use of that navy yard for the construction of these large ships.

(b) It will provide a docking facility in New York Harbor for the largest merchant vessels now calling at that port.

(c) It will provide a dock which will be of great utility in connection with mobilization and overhaul docking in case of a national emergency.

(d) It will provide an essential docking facility in case the fleet

(d) It will provide an essential docking facility in case the fleet is transferred to the east coast.

The principle of the Government assisting in the construction of a drydock is not new. The Navy Department participated in the construction of the large drydock at Hunters Point, Calif., by means of a guaranty of annual payments.

In view of the fact that our fleet spends most of its time in the Pacific, the proposed dock would ordinarily be used by the Navy at infrequent intervals. The committee is of the opinion that the proposed dock should be constructed by private enterprise, assisted by the Government, rather than by the Government itself. This procedure will result in a lower cost to the Government, obviate maintenance costs, reduce operating charges to a minimum, and relieve the Government of the necessity of providing shop facilities which are necessary accessories to any drydock.

which are necessary accessories to any drydock.

CHAPEL AT NAVAL OPERATING BASE, HAMPTON ROADS, VA.

The committee recommends that a chapel be constructed at the naval operating base at Hampton Roads, Va., at an estimated cost of $150,000.

The purpose of this project is to provide a suitable and adequate place for religious worship and welfare work for Protestants and Catholics on the base, including both commissioned and enlisted personnel and their families. Protestant services are and enlisted personnel and their families. Protestant services are now conducted in a small wooden church on the site when the property was taken over by the Navy in 1917. It is too small to accommodate all those desiring to attend religious services, seating only 96 persons. This has necessitated the use of the base action picture auditorium as a place in which to conduct Protestant services on Sunday, the total monthly attendance running between 6,500 and 7,000. In addition, the present Protestant chapel has none of the auxiliary facilities usually associated with church activities, such as Sunday-school rooms, committee rooms, study, etc. The building is in bad condition and repairs are costly; its age and type of construction do not justify the expenditure of large sums of money for its maintenance. Catholic services are held in a building which was constructed in 1917 for use as a recreation hall and remodeled some years ago to make it suitable as a place for Catholic worship. It is of temporary wartime, wooden construction, and is also not large enough to accommodate all those desiring to attend services, seating only 220 persons. It is kept in usable condition only by the expenditure of large sums of money for maintenance, which its age and type of construction do not justify.

The lack of proper Sunday-school facilities has necessitated the use of rooms in the general school building in which to hold classes. These rooms are not suitable for Sunday-school purposes classes. These rooms are not suitable for Sunday-school purposes as they contain technical equipment used during the week by enlisted classes undergoing instruction, which is frequently misplaced and injured by other occupancy. Sunday-school classes of the Catholic chapel are held in alcoves and entry ways, etc., or in most any place where the children can be collected. Nearly all the military establishments in this section have suitable and adequate places of worship. A total of 5,900 recruits go through the training station annually. These young men are at the most impressionable period of their lives and it is considered desirable that the chaplains on duty at the base be provided with adequate facilities to assist them in their work of developing the character and qualifications of these men for the naval service. The provision of adequate chapel facilities will also correct a situation, which is very objectionable, in that there is now no suitable place on the naval operating base in which to hold funeral services or to perform weddings.

on the naval operating base in which to hold funeral services of to perform weddings.

The proposed building will consist of two sections, one for Catholics and the other for Protestants, each section accommodating 512 worshippers, so that services could be conducted simultaneously. The structure will be arranged so that the two chapels could easily be converted into one large assembly space. In addition to the chapels, auxiliary features will be provided; these will include choir rooms, sacristies, Sunday-school rooms, chaplains' offices, rest rooms, studies and a library. studies, and a library.

RETENTION OF TRAINED EMPLOYEES

At the present time the Navy Department has on its rolls a large number of employees who have been employed by the Department for 1 or more years in a temporary status. They have been working on the Navy's emergency-construction programs. They are largely technical men who have been trained for this work. In the ordinary course of events their employment would terminate on June 30 of this year and it would become necessary, in connection with the program authorized in this bill and the program authorized by the naval air bases bill, to hire new people and train them.

The committee amendment (sec. 6) authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of such employees now carried on the rolls as will be required for the preparation of plans and specifications and administrative work in connection with the public-works and public-utility projects authorized by this act or heretofore otherwise authorized.

Retention of these trained employees will enable the Department to expedite the construction of the new naval air bases and other public-works projects, and will effect very material economies, since the cost of training new employees will be obviated.

[Excerpts from H. Rept. No. 192 (76th Cong., 1st sess.)]

The projects are those which have been given high priority by the Navy Department. The items authorized by the bill are a part of a studied and necessary development of the naval shore estab-lishment and are considered necessary for the support of the naval

The items in the bill fall under certain general headings, indicative of the activity they serve most directly, as follows:

Total	86	38, 524, 500

Following is a brief general statement under each of the headings in the above table:

DRYDOCKING REQUIREMENTS

The situation confronting the Navy with respect to adequate drydocking facilities is of serious concern to the national defense. Docking facilities on the west coast and in Hawaii are now inade-quate to meet the needs of the existing fleet in time of peace. Even with the completion of the drydocks now under construction at the Navy Yards, Mare Island and Puget Sound, the peacetime situation will become steadily worse unless further relief is afforded, as vessels now under construction or authorized are added to the

The question of docking facilities has been the subject of exhaustive study and analysis in the Navy Department over a great many years. Shortages exist in all sizes of docks to meet peacetime and wartime requirements. As a result of these studies, the Department has outlined a program of additional docking facilities considered essential for the proper support of the fleet in the Pacific. The items listed in this authorization bill are those which the pact ware the pact which cannot long be deferred if the Navy are the most urgent and which cannot long be deferred if the Navy is to meet its responsibility for national defense.

FLEET MAINTENANCE FACILITIES

The items under this heading, involving only four stations, are for replacements and improvements of industrial facilities which are essential for adequate maintenance of the fleet. At all of these stations certain industrial activities are carried out in buildings which are seriously overcrowded and deteriorated or else are badly scattered. The result is inefficient work and inadequate service.

AERONAUTICAL REQUIREMENTS

The necessary development and expansion of shore facilities required for operation of fleet aircraft have not kept abreast of the increase in the number of aircraft included in the aircraft program. Even with the additional facilities now being provided, there still is serious congestion in many phases of aircraft shore activities. The items in this bill, under this heading, provide for essential expansion of facilities at existing stations.

ORDNANCE DEPOTS

The program for the manufacture of ammunition to meet the requirements of the fleet for active and reserve ammunition, the allowances for vessels now being added to the fleet and for those to be laid down under the act of May 17, 1938, require adequate loading, filling, and storage facilities. Present safe, modern storage facilities are not adequate for this purpose. Additional magazines are essential at Hawthorne and Pearl Harbor to store reserve ammunition. Torpedo storage at San Diego is insufficient for the vessels basing there at present. The facilities at Newport for the manufacture of explosives are overcrowded. Items requested in this authorization bill are designed to meet the deficiencies

SUPPLY FACILITIES

The acute shortage of supply facilities and storage space has been somewhat ameliorated by construction now under way. Three of the remaining essential items for which authorization is requested are for such storage facilities at Pearl Harbor. The remaining item, a storage building at the Marine Corps Depot of Supplies, at Philadelphia, is sorely needed to replace old wartime structures which are badly deteriorated and which constitute a fire hazard.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES

An effective Naval Establishment requires the maintenance of facilities for the preservation of the health of its personnel and for proper care of the sick and injured. Hospital facilities ashore have not kept pace with the expanding personnel and the expansion in other shore facilities made necessary by the enlarged fleet program. Although a number of much needed improvements in hospital facilities are now being undertaken there still remain others that are sorely needed. Suitable sick wards, dispensaries, administration buildings, and quarters for personnel are either nonexistent or are in such poor condition or so overcrowded as to render them unsuitable for their purpose.

RADIO STATIONS

The Navy direction-finder stations are of vast strategic importance to national defense. Their great value to all mariners in promoting safety at sea is too well known to need any explanation. Most of these stations are in rather isolated communities. promoting safety at sea is too well known to need any explanation. Most of these stations are in rather isolated communities. It is essential that the personnel manning them live on the stations, where they are on call for duty day and night, and suitable accommodations must be provided. Nearly 70 percent of the funds for which authorization is requested under this heading are to provide accommodations and suitable technical facilities for certain of these stations. Other authorization is asked for necessary accommodations at other isolated stations where personnel must live at the station and where present accommodations are very unsatisfactory. All of these stations form integral and vital links in the Navy's communication system and must be maintained at the highest possible efficiency. tained at the highest possible efficiency.

TRAINING, EDUCATION, WELFARE, HOUSING

Most of the items under this heading might well be classified under the heading of maintenance and improvement of morale. Seventy percent is for authorization for housing of naval person-nel at stations beyond the continental limits of the United States. nel at stations beyond the continental limits of the United States. The funds which were allotted to the Navy under the current Public Works Administration-Works Progress Administration program could not be spent outside of the continental limits and hence no relief for inadequate housing facilities at these outlying stations could be obtained from that source. The general unsatisfactory situation as regards housing conditions at these stations, particularly at Coco Solo and Pearl Harbor, is well known. The authorization requested in this bill would permit the Navy Department to proceed with an orderly program of housing developments.

The cost estimates given in the bill are based on present-day

The cost estimates given in the bill are based on present-day costs of construction of a similar character.

A detailed list of the items included in the bill with the necessity for their authorization follows:

NAVY YARD, PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII

Graving drydock for large vessels, services, and acces-_ $8, 485, 000

There is but one drydock in the navy yard, Pearl Harbor, and there are no commercial facilities available in the fourteenth naval there are no commercial facilities available in the fourteenth naval district (Hawaiian area) capable of docking battleships. The present dock at Pearl Harbor has a depth of water over the sill at mean high water of 35 feet and a depth of water over the blocking at mean high water of 32 feet 6 inches. These depths are insufficient to permit the docking of battleships in ordinary service condition and it is necessary to materially decrease ordinary drafts before battleships can be accommodated in this dock. Some of the deeper draft battleships could not be docked without the removal of beavy fixed equipment, an impracticable procedure especially in of heavy fixed equipment, an impracticable procedure, especially in time of an emergency.

A study of docking facilities on the west coast and in Hawaii indicates a serious shortage of both naval and commercial docks.

No docks now exist on the west coast or at Pearl Harbor which can accommodate a battleship which might have more than normal draft because of damage.

This project contemplates the construction of a graving dock 1,000 feet in length, 132 feet in width at entrance and through body of dock, and with a depth of 45 feet over the sill at mean low water or 46 feet 6 inches at mean high water.

Personnel buildings and accessories__

The seriousness of the housing situation in the fourteenth naval district has frequently been brought to the Department's attention. The purpose of this item is to provide a number of decent quarters for enlisted men attached to the fourteenth naval district and civilians who are unable to obtain suitable living accommodations in the nearby towns and villages within reach of their income. The under an item in Senate bill S. 2338, act of June 25, 1938, the land in question being adjacent to the navy yard to the northeast. Anumber of enlisted men with their families are now required to live in Honolulu, at a distance of from 10 to 12 miles from the live in Honolulu, at a distance of from 10 to 12 miles from the navy yard, in insanitary, dilapidated, and unhealthful surroundings. There is no possibility that private enterprises will provide suitable housing at prices which enlisted men can afford to pay in Honolulu or in the vicinity of the navy yard. The provision of adequate housing in the fourteenth naval district is a matter of vital importance. The Department is convinced that the situation in the fourteenth naval district with respect to housing will never be satisfactory until the Government takes the initiative and provides these hally needed quarters.

satisfactory until the Government takes the initiative and provides these badly needed quarters.

The housing situation in relation to married officers is comparable to that for enlisted men. Junior officers are required to seek what houses may be available in Honolulu and adjacent towns, at distances ranging from 10 to 15 miles. For the housing that is available, the rents are exorbitant for the accommodations offered and are beyond the reach of the salaries of junior officers.

Repeated efforts have been made by the Navy Department for interest the Housing Corporation in undertaking a development for

The estimate for officers' quarters is based on a unit type of construction, costing approximately $14,000 for senior officers, $12,000 for junior officers, $8,500 for chief warrant and warrant officers per quarters. The estimate for enlisted men and civilians is based upon the construction of a standard low-cost building on concrete piers at an estimate of $8,000 per house. The buildings will be provided with two and three bedrooms, a combined living and dining room, kitchen, bath, and outside porches. The above estimate includes a reasonable allowance for roads, walks, services, grading, etc., in the immediate vicinity of the quarters.

Land is available for the additional quarters over those included in this project when authorization referred to above is secured and appropriation is made for their construction.

Recreation facilities, including buildings and accessories.

Recreation facilities, including buildings and accessories_

The facilities for recreation for enlisted personnel attached to the navy yard and adjacent naval activities are extremely limited. The personnel is required to seek such recreation facilities in other communities and Honolulu, where they are away from naval jurisdiction.

It is essential to contentment and morale of naval personnel that wholesome recreational facilities be provided on the station.

This project contemplates the construction of a recreation building in a convenient location in the navy yard, for naval personnel, where moving pictures and athletic events can be witnessed outside of the weather. The building will be of permanent construction and so designed as to be adapted to all forms of recreational features. Pipe and copper shop building and accessories__

The purpose of this item is to provide a building of suitable The purpose of this item is to provide a building of suitable dimensions to house the pipe and copper shop activities of the yard. The present building No. 2 is entirely too small for the existing work load and during the past year it was necessary to construct a lean-to approximately 30 feet wide by 80 feet long adjacent to the present structure in order to accommodate material removed from

The proposed building will be 80 feet wide, 250 feet long, and contain approximately 584,000 cubic feet. The building is to be of steel frame, three bays wide, with fireproof wall covering and roof. Electric shop building and accessories__

The present electric shop is now housed in a building which is totally inadequate for the present work load. A new shop of adequate size will reduce the cost of work and make available the present building for boatshop activities.

The proposed building will be 120 feet wide by 280 feet long and contain approximately 2,000,000 cubic feet of space. A steel-frame building with fireproof walls and roof is contemplated.

Galvanizing shop building and accessories_

Graving drydock for small vessels, services, and accessories. _ $2,000,000

This item contemplates the construction of a concrete graving drydock for destroyer leaders, submarines, and other light craft. The dock will be wide enough to accommodate two ships side by side. The dock will be pumped with the pumping plant for the large docks and will be otherwise fully equipped for service.

Docking facilities for light craft at Pearl Harbor at present consist of a single marine railway, built in 1922, which was designed to accommodate the old World War type of destroyer. Present-day destroyers in service condition cannot be safely docked on this marine railway. The new dock will thus provide urgently needed docking accommodations for this class of ships at Pearl Harbor. At present these ships must return to the mainland for docking or be accommodated in the existing large graving dock which is not only uneconomical but limits the use of this dock for the larger ships for which it is needed.

Public-works shop and storage building with which the yard is able to effect material reductions in the cost of maintenance work.

The provision of a suitable shop building for the various building trades, including pipefitters and plumbers, electricians, carpenters, and painters, in lieu of the maintaining of these activities in small detached buildings throughout the yard, will add materially to the efficiency of the public works organization.

small detached buildings throughout the yard, will add materially to the efficiency of the public-works organization.

This project contemplates the construction of a building 100 feet wide by 150 feet long, containing approximately 600,000 cubic feet of space. It will be of steel frame with corrugated asbestos siding and roof and equipped with crane service, storage facilities, and space for the individual activities comprising the building-trades group. Facilities for the overhaul of trucks and tractors and other transportation equipment will be provided.

Ordnance shop building and accessories ___

The purpose of this item is to provide an ordnance shop building of sufficient size to take care of the ordnance overhaul activities. At the present time this work occupies a large part of the machine shop which is urgently needed for regular machine-shop activities. With the increased number of vessels being assigned to Pearl Har-bor for repair and overhaul, the ordnance repair work is corre-spondingly larger and additional space should be provided in a location detached from the regular machine shop activities of the

This project contemplates the construction of a permanent building 50 feet wide and 200 feet long, with 35-ton bridge cranes and railroad service running into the center of the building for the economical handling of ordnance parts. The building will be provided with offices, tollet and locker rooms, and with the necessary facilities for the operation of the shop.

Storehouse building and accessories_

The purpose of this item is to provide storage space to meet the demands of the industrial department of the yard. The expansion of industrial activities has made it necessary to carry in store a large or industrial activities has made it necessary to carry in store a large quantity and variety of material, with resultant serious overcrowding in the existing storehouses. There is one permanent multistory concrete building on the yard and several smaller temporary buildings which have been converted into storage buildings and which are extremely overcrowded at the present time. With the increase in the number of ships and with the resultant larger volume of stores to be carried, present facilities are not only inadequate but will be entirely deficient in the future entirely deficient in the future.

The project contemplates the construction of a multistory, reinforced concrete building, approximately 220 feet wide and 260 feet long, with a total volume of approximately 3,000,000 cubic feet.

NAVY YARD, MARE ISLAND, CALIF.

Graving dry dock, services, and accessories_ . $1,750,000

An intensive study has been made of the docking situation in the San Francisco Bay area, particularly in reference to the requirements for the work load imposed on the Mare Island Navy Yard at present and that anticipated upon the completion of the Vinson Navy and other requirements which may be expected in an emergency.

The facilities now existing at the Mare Island Navy Yard consist of a small dock constructed in 1891, which will accommodate the of a small dock constructed in 1891, which will accommodate the smaller vessels of the fleet; a dock constructed in 1910, which will accommodate cruisers and large auxiliaries; and a dock now under construction which will also accommodate cruisers, auxiliaries, and others of the smaller units of the fleet.

The Mare Island Navy Yard is designated as a small shippard and in addition to the shipbuilding is the repair yard for cruisers, auxiliaries, destroyers, and other small vessels of the fleet. The present docking facilities are inadequate to meet the present docking requirements and will be seriously deficient in capacity for docking the increased number of vessels of the Vinson Navy as also the load which may be expected in an emergency. which may be expected in an emergency.

The studies indicate that additional small-ship docking capacity should be provided, and this project contemplates the construction of a drydock of 508 feet in length, 104 feet in width, with 21 feet of water over the sill at mean high water, in which two destroyers can be docked abreast and where other ships of equivalent length, draft, and beam can be accommodated.

Utility and transportation buildings and accessories__

The numerous small public-works shop activities and transportation overhaul facilities of the yard are now housed in 12 scattered sheds, nondescript in character and widely scattered over the navy-yard reservation. These buildings, on account of their temporary nature and limited size, are inconvenient and undesirable from an administrative standpoint, do not adequately serve the needs of the public works department of the yard, and are a decided fire risk to adjacent activities.

The purpose of this project is to centralize under one roof the

The purpose of this project is to centralize under one roof the numerous small public-works activities and consumable supplies storage sheds and transportation repair facilities now scattered in these 12 temporary sheds and lean-tos. This centralization will permit coordination of activities, the common use of a minimum of prime movers, tools, telephones, storekeepers, etc.; will greatly save the time of mechanics and laborers in the performance of their work; will greatly reduce the existing fire risk and overhead costs; and improve the general appearance of the yard by the elimination of these many unsightly structures.

This project contemplates the construction of a one-story building 200 feet long by 90 feet wide, founded on piles, with concrete floor, steel frame, and corrugated asbestos roof and siding. The building will be provided with the necessary partitions to separate the various activities of the public-works department. The provision of this building will materially add to the efficiency of the sion of this building will materially add to the efficiency of the maintenance activities of the yard.

Laboratory buildings and accessories. Present facilities for laboratory work are scattered into several structures of antiquated and nonfireproof character. The buildings are located in the industrial section of the yard where noise and vibration seriously interfere with the activities of the laboratories. In spite of this restriction in facilities, the laboratories are depended upon to analyze and test contract and construction madepended upon to analyze and test contract and construction material as to compliance with specifications for coast and outlying stations. In addition to the chemical, physical, paint, sound, micro, and gamma ray photographic laboratories, it is anticipated that there will be added electrical, optical, fire-control, and metallurgical laboratories. The present facilities are entirely inadequate

It is necessary in view of the large volume of work being undertaken by the yard to have sufficient laboratory space well equipped to conduct the tests required on construction and contract materials.

This project contemplates the construction of a three-story building approximately 135 feet long by 35 feet wide of concrete and steel construction to afford the necessary space for laboratory Submarine barracks and mess hall_ $270,000 A wood frame building on concrete piles with wood shingled roof A wood frame building on concrete piles with wood shingled roof constructed in 1918 provides the only accommodations ashore for housing officers and men attached to submarines when the submarines are uninhabitable due to the performance of work on these vessels and during construction and overhaul periods. On account of the very limited spaces on board a submarine the overhaul usually requires the vessel to be vacated as living quarters. The present building was constructed in 1918 to house the marine transfer of 55% men and 20 necessarily constructed. The present building was constructed in 1918 to house the marine guard consisting of 585 men and 30 noncommissioned officers. It was built of green lumber, the only kind obtainable during the war emergency. In spite of repairs amounting to over $27,000 since 1934, the building is now beyond economical repair. For reasons of economy and sanitation and safety and morale of the occupants it should be replaced at an early date with a small fire-proof barracks building. A capacity of 270 men, including 20 chief petty officers, is considered adequate. This number is equivalent to the crews of five submarines, the maximum required in recent years. The smaller building will result in savings in heating and upkeep. When the new building is occupied it is proposed that the older building be removed and that usable materials be salvaged by relief labor. The buildings will include sleeping, toilet, galley, mess hall, and recreation facilities, and offices for the management of the barracks. agement of the barracks.

Under this project it is proposed to construct a two-story building, 140 feet long by 80 feet wide, to contain all of the facilities necessary for the recreation of enlisted personnel at a remote station, such as auditorium for dancing, motion pictures, indoor sports, church services, bowling alleys, poolroom, restaurant and soda fountain, library and reading room, barber shop, ship's service room, and other minor activities. In addition, the building will be planned to serve as a haven for families in case of a disaster.

NAVAL STATION, GUANTANAMO, CUBA

Enlisted men's quarters and accessories__ This project covers the construction of six sets of quarters for married enlisted personnel. Enlisted personnel of the higher ratings, with wives and children, should have some means provided so that they can have their families with them during a 2-year tour of duty in Guantanamo.

There are 29 chief petty officers and 31 petty officers first class attached to this station. All of these are authorized by law transportation for dependent families to their permanent station. In addition to these, men of lower ratings desire to bring families to a segregated station on which they are to serve for 2 years. The only living accommodations for these families than can be found are those on the reservation. found are those on the reservation.

Efforts are made by those responsible for designating replacements to send no more married enlisted men than can obtain quarters on the station for their families. This does not appear quarters on the station for their families. This does not appear to work out in practice, and at the present time there are on the station 38 chief petty officers and petty officers first class who are married, of which 22 have quarters on the station. Of this 22, 14 live in quarters that have been constructed or obtained through the welfare fund.

Of the Government quarters occupied by the remaining eight, only three are regularly fitted and furnished by the Government.

These three are for men attached to the radio station. Married quarters are furnished at radio stations, presumably because such stations are isolated and the presence on the station of the personnel is requisite. The same reasoning applies to this station in general, and it is believed that steps to remedy the present unsatisfactory situation as regards quarters for enlisted men should be inaugurated. The amount estimated is not sufficient to pro-vide completely for probable needs.

Explosive-manufacturing building and accessories ...

The present facilities for the manufacture of fuzes, primers, detonators, and other small-ammunition units are carried on in a number of small temporary, detached buildings scattered over the station. The buildings used are temporary wood buildings, Nos. 59, 68, and 63, constructed during the war and have long since passed the point where further upkeep charges bear proper relation to the value of the buildings.

It is necessary, in order to keep pace with the construction program, that adequate facilities be provided for the manufacture of these small ordnance parts. Dispensary building and accessories_

The present dispensary at the naval proving ground was constructed in 1919 and consists of a temporary building with scraptile foundations, wood siding and framework, and tar-paper roof, and cost $5,857. On account of the temporary construction of this building, it is extremely difficult to heat and is a severe fire hazard. One fire which was extinguished before any serious damage was done occurred on January 1, 1932. The building is uncomfortable for patients, being drafty and leaky. This building constitutes the only facilities on the station for emergency cases and for patients only facilities on the station for emergency cases and for patients requiring hospital treatment preparatory to being sent to Washington, the nearest general hospital. The building is a rambling structure, added to from time to time to accommodate additional men, until now it is entirely unsatisfactory for housing and messing the marine guard, and bathing, cooking, and recreation facilities are inadequate. On account of the type of construction, living conditions in summer are unbearable on account of heat from the galvanized-iron roof.

Filling house No. 307 is a wood frame structure on wood foundations, constructed in 1908. The building has deteriorated and maintenance costs to keep it in a serviceable condition are excessive. This building with two companion structures now being rebuilt constitute the ammuniton filling facilities of the depot. In order to meet the ammunition construction program, it is necessary that this building, in addition to the two now being rebuilt, be reconstructed. The building when completed will be used as a projectile loading house and will form part of the filling facilities of the depot.

More and more ships are being assigned to the San Diego area, the destroyer base in particular, and this station is the only activity which is equipped for effecting repairs and docking of the smaller units so assigned. Purchase and improvement of auxiliary landing fields____ $321,000

Twelve auxiliary landing fields are now leased by the Navy on a year-to-year basis in the San Diego area and are used as auxiliary operating fields by the squadrons based on and operating from the station. During periods of fleet concentration in the San Diego area there are over 400 planes based on North Island. The acquisition by purchase of these fields is of such immediate importance that a continuance of the present policy of year-to-year rental with increasing complications on renewals of leases, etc., is very unsatisfactory. Annually the Navy is placed in the unfortunate position factory. Annually the Navy is placed in the unfortunate position of accepting terms of leases from civilian owners whose knowledge of the situation confronting the Navy results in the dictation of terms manifestly discriminatory. Furthermore, there is doubtful justification for the expenditure of Government funds for the graduations of the standard justification for the expenditure of Government funds for the grading and surfacing of leased fields where there always arises the question as to whether leases can be renewed. It is essential in practically all cases that the fields be improved to promote safety and operating efficiency. Any such improvements necessarily accomplished by the Navy constitute the very basis on which the owners justify advanced rentals. While, in most instances, only the Navy would be interested in procuring such leases, it is a matter of common knowledge that such fields are indispensable for service purposes. The continuance of this policy merely defers the date when the issue must necessarily be met. In the meanwhile, the operations of such permanent bases as those at San Diego are threatened annually. Relief from this situation in a locality where the Navy's interests are permanent is a matter of sound and essential economy. economy

The acquisition of permanent titles to the fields will place the Navy in a position to effect permanent improvements such as grading and oil surfacing, together with such other items as may be pertinent and necessary. Information with respect to the present existing values of each tract was obtained from the San Diego County assessor's office. The estimated selling price per acre was established after conference with what are considered competent and dependable real-estate authorities in San Diego. Due regard was given to recent appraisals and transfer of properties in the same vicinity where such information was available. While it is estimated that the fields may be purchased for a total expenditure of approximately $200,000, it is possible that the final cost may be somewhat more. It is estimated, however, that the total amount of the authorization herein requested will adequately take care of the purchase prices, together with conditioning of the fields where required, such as clearing, grading, and surfacing.

A further aggravating complication is caused by the present limited size of the station field proper, the ultimate size of which is also dictated by existing permanent construction. Without the relief afforded by outlying fields, undue hazards are inevitable, and effective training of squadrons cannot be realized. Approximately 200 aircraft are based at and operating from this station at the present time. prevents urgently needed improvements of a permanent nature at such fields, because of the restriction of expending public funds on privately owned property. Permanent improvements, including resurfacing of fields, are becoming increasingly important with the acquisition of more modern and speedier carrier aircraft types. The Department has requested the commandant, fifth naval district, to study the situation in the Norfolk area and submit recommendations, together with estimates of cost, for purchasing auxiliary landing fields. The acquisition of adequate auxiliary landing fields in the Norfolk area is urgent and the basic estimate for which authorization is requested is considered by the Department adequate for the purpose intended. While specific recommendations cannot at present be given as to the lands proposed for purchase, it is considered inadvisable in the authorization for purchase to specify the lands which are under contemplation, as such chase to specify the lands which are under contemplation, as such action would tend to enhance the land values. This project contemplates the construction of an aircraft storage building approximately 325 feet by 120 feet with 42 feet clear interior height. The structure will have concrete foundations, concrete floor, steel-frame superstructure covered with corrugated-asbestos siding, and built-up roofing. The building will be equipped with a 10-ton crane.

The estimated cost of the building is $240,000. Accessories, including water, sewers, and electric services, 10-ton traveling crane, paving, tracks, etc., are estimated to cost $45,000. Total estimated cost is $225,000.

A break-down of the estimate is as follows:

Sanitary facilities are either entirely lacking or of a very minor character. The few houses available are at a considerable distance from the aviation activities and in undesirable surroundings and rents are exorbitant.

This project contemplates the construction of a housing development comprising quarters for the commanding officer, quarters for 13 other officers, a bachelor quarters for about 6 officers, and 8 quarters for married enlisted men.

MARINE CORPS FLYING FIELD, QUANTICO, VA.

Aircraft and engine overhaul building and accessories__

Aircraft and engine overhaul building and accessories...... $250,000

The existing Marine Corps aircraft and engine overhaul facilities at Quantico are located at the old field (Brown Field) in buildings of temporary wartime construction; and these facilities are inadequate for the efficient maintenance and overhaul of engines and the sixty-odd modern aircraft operated by the Marine Corps on the east coast. The operations and shop facilities at Quantico are gradually being moved from Brown Field to Turner, which was purchased and constructed under authority of the act of May 14, 1930. To date the only permanent structures built on the new field area are four hangars. In addition, a barracks building, roads, and services, together with major improvement of the flying field and runways will be provided under the Work Relief and Public Works Administration Act of 1938.

This project contemplates the construction of a combined aircraft and engine overhaul shop on the new field. The building proposed will be of steel-frame construction with brick walls, approximately 144 feet wide and 300 feet long, approximately one-half of the building furnishing clear space for assembling and disassembling of planes being overhauled; the remaining half of the assembling of planes being overhauled; the remaining half of the building to be constructed with mezzanine floors to be used largely for engine overhaul. The building will provide for such activities as sheet metal, fabric, and dope shops, woodworking, instrument and experimental shops, together with office and washroom facilities. Motor test stand building and accessories_.

There are no permanent or adequate facilities available at Quantico for the testing of airplane engines. This work is now carried on at Brown Field in a temporary building of wartime construction in which facilities have been improvised for this activity. The old building is of wood-frame construction covered with corrugated iron in which have been located four test stands and their escaleted continuent. This installation is neither as and their associated equipment. This installation is neither safe nor adequate for the testing of modern airplane engines and the construction of a suitable building is necessary as an adjunct to the new aircraft- and engine-overhaul shop covered under another item of this program. This project contemplates the construction of a brick and concrete building approximately 90 feet long by 50 feet wide, of the tunnel type, to reduce the noise and with suitable partitions and observation rooms to provide for the four test stands considered necessary for this station.

MARINE BARRACKS, PARRIS ISLAND, S. C.

Buildings and accessories__ $3, 018, 500 The items to be constructed under this authority and the need therefor follow: Mess hall and galley building and accessories, main station, $300,000.

Barracks buildings with a total capacity of about 900 men are now under construction with funds allocated from P. W. A. and will provide permanent housing at the main station for the complement of post troops as well as recruits under training at Parris Island.

The existing mess-hall facilities, however, are housed in an old navy yard industrial building constructed as a boatshop in 1899 and located about one-fifth of a mile from the center of the barracks area. The building now in use provides limited messing facilities on the second floor, has a seating capacity of not over 500 men, and is not satisfactory for mess-hall purposes with regard to design or location. It is necessary that a mess hall properly designed to accommodate not less than 900 men be provided in a suitable location with regard to the new barracks buildings.

The project contemplates a permanent building in keeping with the barracks buildings now under construction and designed to mess 900 men.

Garage and maintenance shop building and accessories__

The present housing of motor vehicles is inadequate, and consists of lean-tos and open shelters. The present shops are partly located in the original navy-yard buildings and partly in temporary buildings erected as a part of the wartime program. All these garage and maintenance activities are now widely separated in the various structures at different locations at the main station.

A new garage and shop building combining all facilities under one roof is precessary for efficient and settlestory organization of the roof is necessary for efficient and satisfactory organization of the garage and maintenance forces under the post quartermaster and will eliminate excessive maintenance on numerous small buildings.

The project contemplates a one-story fireproof building with concrete floor area of approximately 35,000 square feet. The building will be located in an area to be reserved for industrial purposes adjacent to the power house. The project contemplates all accessories, including electric, water, sewer, and telephone connections, and overhead traveling crane for garage shop.

Quarters and accessories for officers___

The present quarters which this item will replace consists of 6 wood-frame buildings erected in 1894 and 44 wood-frame quarters erected as a part of the cantonment established in 1917. The older quarters require excessive maintenance to keep them in a suitable condition for habitation, and the wartime quarters, which are of extremely light construction and not insulated or otherwise protected from the weather, require, in addition to excessive maintenance, a large yearly sum for heating.

New quarters with individual heating plants will result in a saving for yearly maintenance and heating alone of $50,000 and in addition by their new location will release areas for training of recruits near the new barracks.

In addition to the foregoing covering permanent quarters for commissioned officers, one building of permanent construction with a capacity for 10 bachelor officers is necessary. The present quarters for bachelor officers is located in the training-station area. It is a wood-frame building two stories in height, erected as a part of the 1917 program and due to its large size is not suited to the present small number of bachelor officers regularly assigned. Provision of a new bachelor officers' quarters of small size to provide for 10 officers will effect a saving of approximately $5,000 a year in the cost of maintenance and heating.

The estimate for the quarters development is based on two-story permanent construction on concrete foundations with exterior siding and sheathing of asbestos and roof of asbestos cement shingles.

ing and sheathing of asbestos and roof of asbestos cement shingles. A break-down of the estimate is as follows:

The present noncommissioned officers' quarters now in use are wood-frame buildings erected as part of the cantonment constructed in 1917 or constructed from salvaged materials from buildings demolished after the World War. Due to their original light construction they have deteriorated rapidly, so that present maintenance costs, together with costs for heating, are excessive. The erection of new permanent quarters will reduce the annual cost of maintenance by at least $25,000 per year.

The project contemplates the construction of quarters for 45 noncommissioned officers of two-story permanent construction on concrete foundations with exterior siding and roofing of asbestoscement shingles.

and others small corrugated-iron buildings.

This project will provide storage for post quartermaster's supplies, clothing, materials, and equipment in one central location in the industrial area. The proposed building will replace 18 temporary buildings now being used and which will result in a marked decrease in maintenance costs.

The estimate is based on the construction of two 3-story reinforced concrete storehouses having a combined floor area of 142,000 concerns.

Post exchange building and accessories___

The present post-exchange activities are carried on in a group of four wood-frame buildings constructed in 1919, which due to age and deterioration are difficult and uneconomical to maintain. It is desirable to combine activities of store, library, tailor shop, shoe shop, bowling alley, theater, etc., in one building to reduce maintenance costs.

The project contemplates the construction of a permanent building to house the welfare activities of the post exchange, including library, theater, post office, post prison, and post amusement activities. The building will be located in an area adjacent to the new barracks.

Hospital facilities, including buildings and accessories__

The present hospital consists of one- and two-story frame buildings having an average age of 21 years, and the annual maintenance costs on these structures are excessive. The buildings are all of light construction, not insulated, and are expensive to operate during the heating season.

It is considered essential in the interest of safety to the sick that fireproof hospital facilities combining the outlying dental office and sick bay be provided, and it is planned to place all of the hospital activities in one building in order to economically care for the regular station personnel of over 1,100, including dependents. The estimate is based on a two-story fireproof building on concrete foundations with steel frame and brick walls, having operating room, surgical and medical wards, urology, X-ray, dental, and outpatient departments.

Recreation building and accessories for enlisted men ...

On account of the isolation of this station and the lack of nearby cities, it is necessary to provide a suitable building of permanent construction to house various recreational activities of the station. No facilities of a permanent nature exist for this purpose.

The temporary wooden building which has been serving this purpose was partially destroyed by fire on January 18, 1939.

The project contemplates a fireproof permanent single-story building with brick walls on concrete foundations to provide satisfactory facilities for the recreation of enlisted men.

Barracks, mess hall, and galley building and accessories,

No facilities at Page Field exist for housing and subsisting personnel connected with aircraft. It is necessary at present to transport all personnel to and from the main station, which is unsatisfactory, due to the difference in hours of work for aircraft and the necessity of maintaining guard at night. Facilities are re-quired for the housing of personnel attached to aircraft squadrons on training schedule.

The project contemplates the provision of a permanent barracks, galley, and mess hall for 120 men, and will consist of a single-story, fireproof building of permanent construction.

Post chapel building and accessories_ On account of the distance of 17 miles from Beaufort and the impracticability of furnishing transportation thereto, a permanent chapel suitable for all types of religious services is considered necessary and desirable on the station. The only facilities existing consist of a small temporary building constructed in 1917, which is entirely inadequate for the purpose.

The project contemplates the construction of a fireproof building constructed of appropriate design and interface transport treatment with a seating capacity.

of appropriate design and interior treatment, with a seating capacity of approximately 500.

Post school building and accessories___

Due to the distance of 17 miles to the next grammar school in Beaufort, S. C., the number of young children on the station and the lack of suitable transportation, it is necessary to maintain a school to include six grades at the station. The only existing facilities consist of a temporary building constructed in 1917, which is of light frame construction. The building constitutes a serious fire hazard, is hadly deteriorated and maintenance costs are excessive. is badly deteriorated, and maintenance costs are excessive

The project contemplates a permanent fireproof building with adequate classroom, office space, and other pertinent facilities for at least four teachers and five grades.

MARINE BARRACKS, SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

Development of rifle range at La Jolla, Calif.

The present facilities at the rifle range, La Jolla, are entirely inadequate for the large number of men from the Marine Corps base, destroyer base, training station, naval air station, and ships' detachments of the fleet regularly using this range. The land on which the range is to be developed was recently transferred from the city of San Diego to the Navy Department for this purpose.

The project will provide an administration building, eight 100-man barracks, mess hall, and galley and services, including heating plant, roads, walks, and distributing systems for water, cas, electricity.

steam, and sewers. The provision of these facilities is required to augment the present housing and messing facilities which are insufficient to meet present and growing demands.

Temporary buildings of semipermanent type of construction are to Temporary buildings of semipermanent type of construction are to be constructed rather than permanent ones, for the reason that any future expansion which might be required may change the nature of the use of this area as far as location of firing points and butts are concerned, which are determined by the development of the range of weapons and ammunition. Temporary buildings of the type contemplated are capable of change in location or of a considerable salvage of material should their use be discontinued. The 100-man barracks are recommended to permit the use of only such barracks as the continuously changing strength of the range would necessitate, thus permitting a considerable saving in maintenance and upkeep by the closing of barracks not in use. The messing and galley facilities will provide for 1,000 men at one sitting.

This project contemplates the development of the necessary facilities for the housing, messing, and service of 1,000 men, includ-cilities for the housing, messing, and service of 1,000 men, including the necessary installation of roads, walks, and service systems for a complete working unit.

MARINE BARRACKS, QUANTICO, VA.

Contagious ward and accessories_.

The present facilities for handling contagious diseases in temporary type buildings are entirely inadequate, of a make-shift character, and do not provide the segregation necessary. With the development of a medical center in the shipyard area at a considerable distance from present medical facilities, it is necessary that a permanent building for handling contagious diseases be constructed adjacent to the new dispensary building now being constructed under an allotment obtained from the emergency relief funds. relief funds.

This project contemplates the construction of a 2-story building with basement, of concrete frame and brick construction, approximately 120 feet long by 30 feet wide, providing accommodations in quiet rooms and general wards for 20 isolation patients and the necessary facilities for the special preparation of food, sterilization of dishes, disinfection of patients, personnel, and building accommodations. clothing.

Barracks building and accessories_____

A project for the construction of a new dispensary unit was included in the program of emergency construction and an allot-ment secured for this purpose. The dispensary or hospital is being constructed at a somewhat remote location from the present facilities, which will necessitate the removal of the corps men's quarters to this new location. Corps men are now quartered in temporary wartime buildings which have deteriorated beyond reasonable repair.

This project contemplates the construction of a 2-story building with partial basement of concrete frame and brick construction, approximately 108 feet long by 50 feet wide, to accommodate 50 corps men and 15 miscellaneous personnel. Messing facilities for these men will be provided in the main dispensary unit.

Shop building and accessories__

The existing shop facilities for the maintenance of the post are located in several detached and widely separated temporary wartime buildings which have deteriorated through constant use to a point where repairs for their continued use is paramount to reconstruction.

reconstruction.

It is highly desirable for the efficient maintenance of the post that these isolated activities be concentrated under one roof in the industrial section of the post to reduce transportation and to save time of workmen in the discharge of their duties.

This project contemplates the construction of a permanent concrete and brick E-shaped building in the industrial section of the post, approximately 300 feet long by 125 feet wide, to serve as a combined shop building for the machine shop, carpenter shop, plumbers shop, electricians shop, and other miscellaneous trades engaged in the maintenance of the post.

existing temporary inadequate and unsatisfactory quarters.

The project contemplates a two-story building with partial basement, of concrete-frame-and-brick construction, approximately 120 feet long by 30 feet wide to accommodate 10 nurses and providing the following facilities: Eight nurses' bedrooms with connecting bath; two suites with bedroom, bath, and living room; dining room and reception room; laundry; kitchen and other miscellaneous facilities.

School building and accessories ___.

There are now on the Marine Corps reservation approximately 300 officers and enlisted men's children of school age. These children are now housed in three old wooden buildings constructed as barracks during the World War, are badly deteriorated, and exceedingly hazardous and expensive to maintain. The buildings are a dangerous firetrap and are poorly suited to school purposes as regards heating, lighting, and ventilation. The buildings are located on the side of a high bank where any accident or fire to the buildings would create a very dangerous situation and might be accompanied by tremendous loss of life.

The existing school is supported by parents of the children, a particular hardship on the enlisted men. The county has refused to contribute to the support of the school and yet is unable to provide facilities for the education of the post children in nearby schools, due to lack of space and instructors. The State has been contributing in part, having allotted only $3,400 for this scholastic year. There is no certainty that the grant will be continued. The school accommodates children from kindergarten through the eleventh grade. Children attending the twelfth grade must go to private schools or to the public high school in Quantico. The authorities have stated that transportation to the latter cannot be provided because of crowded busses and only after all cannot be provided because of crowded busses and only after an other children have been accommodated.

In general, the educational authorities feel that they have no responsibility for the education of children residing on Federal reservations. This situation places a heavy burden on the enlisted men and officers of the post and discriminates against their children by the lack of opportunity for the benefits of free education. This project contemplates the construction of a building to accommodate approximately 300 children of 12 grades and kindergarten, with chemistry and physical laboratories, library, assembly hall gymnasium, miscellaneous offices, storerooms, etc. The school hall, gymnasium, miscellaneous offices, storerooms, etc. The school will be laid out to conform to the recognized standards and requirewill be laid out to conform to the recognized standards and requirements of regional educational associations. The building will be of two stories, concrete and brick construction, approximately 215 feet long and 87 feet wide with half basement, and will contain approximately 744,000 cubic feet. The estimated cost of the building complete with the necessary roads and service connections is $250,000.

The storage buildings for the Marine Corps depot of supplies in Philadelphia are located at the foot of Snyder Avenue on the Dela-Philadelphia are located at the foot of Snyder Avenue on the Delaware River water front on land leased from private individuals. The buildings on this leased land consist of temporary structures constructed by the Army during the war as a motor-transport depot. The ground lease and custody of the buildings were taken over by the Marine Corps in 1922, and the buildings were taken over by the Marine Corps in 1922, and the buildings at that time were of barely sufficient capacity to meet the storage needs with regard to expeditionary equipment. On December 9, 1937, one building was destroyed by fire, which reduced the available storage capacity by about 25 percent, to a remaining total of 206,600 square feet, which has resulted in severe overcrowding of the remaining facilities both because of lack of space and increased storage requirements due to a considerable increase in the quantity of materials to be stored. Much of the Marine Corps mobile equipment, amounting in value to $9,000,000, is stored in these buildings and is subject to fire hazard and to damage through leaky roofs, winis subject to fire hazard and to damage through leaky roofs, windows, doors, and side walls. The lease under which the land was obtained expires in 1940, and the maintenance cost on the existing temporary storehouse structures is excessive.

In view of the importance of this activity, it is considered essential that adequate buildings of permanent character be provided on Government-owned property for the storage of the vast amount of material and equipment held in readiness for emergency expeditionary use.

The Secretary of the Navy has recently made available to the Marine Corps the property known as the Naval Home wharf property as a site for the construction of the proposed new storage buildings for the Marine Corps depot of supplies in Philadelphia, with the proviso that when such property is no longer required by the Marine Corps the use thereof will revert to the Naval Home, and all permanent improvements placed thereon will inure to the benefit of the Naval Home.

This project contemplates the construction on the United States aval Home wharf property of the following buildings at the estimated cost given:

Storage building and accessories (about 320,000 square feet of storage area)______Lumber storage (7,500 square feet in area)______ $1, 200, 000 35,000 Heating plant

The storehouse will be a four-story reinforced concrete structure, designed for the rapid handling of expeditionary stores and equipment. The heating plant will be of reinforced concrete construction in keeping with the architectural treatment of the storage building. The lumber storage will be of one-story permanent-type construction and designed to facilitate the air drying and seasoning of the materials stored therein.

NAVAL RESEARCH LABORATORY, BELLEVUE, D. C.

Barracks, mess hall, and instruction building and ac-$230,000

The enlisted men attached to the radio school and other activities of the research laboratory are housed in wartime frame barracks and mess-hall buildings built at Norfolk and moved to Bellevue in 1924 and in a very old frame farmhouse which was on the site when taken over by the Government. The laboratory rooms are located in the research laboratory buildings. The activities in which the men are engaged are the radio-material school and interior-communications school.

school and interior-communications school.

To avoid cost of extensive repairs to the present buildings, to improve school facilities, improve health conditions, avoid serious fire hazards, and release laboratory space for research work, it is necessary and desirable that a permanent building for housing, messing, and providing school and instruction facilities for the enlisted men attached to the laboratory be provided.

This project contemplates the construction of a permanent, reinforced concrete building of approximately 500,000 cubic feet and harmonizing with existing buildings to quarter and mess 200 men and provide classrooms, workshops, laboratories, and offices for the schools.

NAVY SUPPLY DEPOT, PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII

Provision storage building and accessories ___ _ $250,000

No facilities now exist at Pearl Harbor for the concentration of supplies of provisions for the naval units of the fleet based on Pearl Harbor and to act as a reservoir for replenishing stocks of provisions on the vessels of the fleet when based on Pearl Harbor and maneuvering in the Hawaiian Islands area. The purpose of the light was a reason of the stock of the sto and maneuvering in the Hawalian Islands area. The purpose of this item is to provide adequate storage for flour, beans, rice, coffee, sugar, and similar items of dry provisions needed for the fleet. This to be a part of the fleet supply depot facilities proposed to be constructed at Kuahua Island.

The estimate is based upon the construction of a single-story, reinforced-concrete building 140 feet wide by 220 feet long. Foundations of the building will be designed to carry an additional story if this should become necessary in an emergency or when required by assignment of additional units to be based on Pearl Harbor. The structure is an essential unit of the fleet supply depot. Its construction is made necessary by the facts cited above and by the possibility of strikes in the maritime industry such as occurred recently, at which times the present storage for provisions is entirely inadequate to tide over such an emergency. The building proper is estimated to cost $175,000, the remainder of the estimate being required for the necessary roads, services, and fixed equipment to place the building in commission. commission.

NAVAL HOSPITAL, MARE ISLAND, CALIF.

Administration and subsistence building and accessories__ $475,000

The present old wooden administration building was constructed in 1889 and contains 70 beds for patients, to which can be assigned only ambulant patients because of the fire hazard. The building also contains numerous offices; surgical and dental wards; lock wards; eye, ear, and nose departments; subsistence section; and quarters for commissary, night corpsmen, and officer of the day. This building is an extreme fire hazard on account of its temporary nature, narrow halls, and stairways and inadequate fire escapes and being surrounded by modern fireproof wards of recent construction is incongruous.

In order to provide the necessary utilities for the proper administration of the hospital, and to provide adequate subsistence facilities for patients and hospital staff, it is necessary that the present obsolete building be removed and a modern fireproof construction be substituted to be located and connected to the existing permanent ward buildings. This is a much-needed improvement and will materially add to the efficiency of the operation of the hospital and provide adequate and permanent facilities for administration and subsistence and add to the facilities for caring for the sick. for the sick.

This project contemplates the construction of a reinforced concrete five-story building of approximately 1,200,000 cubic foot space. The building will be connected to the existing permanent ward buildings and will be connected to the existing service lines and road system of the hospital reservation.

The building will be of steel frame with hollow-tile stuccoed walls and permanent roofing.

NAVAL HOSPITAL, GUAM

Isolation and tuberculosis wards and accessories__

The present facilities for isolaton of contagious diseases consist of two small wooden shacks, one 15 by 15 feet and the other 20 by 20 feet. The former without partitions has been used for males, and the latter without partitions has been used for female pa-tients. They have no fixed toilets or arrangements for an attend-ant or for messing or other service. They are used for such lepers as it is necessary to give temporary domiciliary care. Typhoid fever and other contagious diseases at present must be treated in the centeral wayis the general wards.

No provision for the treatment of naval personnel who developed tuberculosis exists other than the wards where, despite all precautions that may be taken, patients with tuberculosis are a definite menace and a source of infection to other patients. Facilities for the isolation and treatment of the most dangerous open terminal cases should be built at the earliest date

This project contemplates the construction of two isolation units in a location where such diseases as are mentioned above can be treated in a safe manner. The site recommended is upon ground owned by the Federal Government and is entirely suitable for the purpose intended. Accommodations will be provided for 60 patients.

NAVAL HOSPITAL, PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII

Barracks buildings and accessories_____

There are 77 hospital corps men now attached to the hospital who are required to live in the cooks' quarters, over the galley, and in a temporary wooden building originally constructed for convalescing patients. The present arrangement it entirely unsatisfactory, wholly inappropriate, and crowded. They are too near the hospital wards and too close to sick officers' quarters to maintain a proper degree of quiet.

It is highly desirable that advants are six and too close to sick officers' quarters to maintain a proper degree of quiet.

It is highly desirable that adequate quarters be provided for these men in a location where they will be to themselves, in order that proper rest periods may be established and where they will be free from the strict discipline now required on account of their close proximity to patients.

This project contemplates the construction of a two-story building approximately 234 feet long by 72 feet wide and containing approximately 370,000 cubic feet. The building will be designed to house 100 men and will be of permanent construction and in keeping with the architectural design of the present hospital.

NAVAL RADIO STATION, GATUN, C. Z.

Quarters and accessories_.

At the present time 18 enlisted men are quartered at this station, leaving accommodations available consisting of quarters for three married and four single operators. Although every reasonable effort is made to reduce the number of married men attached to the station to a minimum, there is nevertheless necessity for from two to four married radio men to find quarters in Cristobal or Colon. If the normal percentage of married men were transferred to this station, a much greater number would be forced to seek quarters off the station.

It is highly desirable that adequate quarters be provided in order that the men may not be forced to seek housing in the undesirable sections of Colon. The facilities that are available are in questionable localities and the men and their families are subjected to

This project contemplates the construction of a two-story apartment-type building containing accommodations for four families.

NAVAL RADIO STATION, EUREKA, CALIF.

Quarters and accessories __

This station is located 19 miles from Eureka, Calif., and operators must necessarily live on the station. The complement of the station consists of 10 operators, and while there are adequate quarters for single men only 3 married operators can be accommodated. It has been found desirable to assign married operators to such isolated shore stations. Experience with social conditions developed at this isolated station indicates the necessity for adequate housing of married operators.

This project contemplates the construction of a two-family quarters building for married operators. The construction of this building will materially add to the contentment of the personnel and result in more efficient service.

NAVAL RADIO STATION, POINT LOMA, CALIF.

Quarters and accessories__ _ $22,000

The complement of this station averages 29 men. The average number of married men on the station for the past several years has been 21, and this appears to be the continuing average which may be anticipated. Quarters are now available on the station for the chief radioman in charge and eight married enlisted operators. Additional quarters are therefore required for married operators in order that as many as possible of the peacetime complement may live on the station

In order to obtain housing facilities within their income, 14 of the personnel residing off the reservation find it necessary to live in the eastern and southern sections of San Diego, which are from 10 to 15 miles from the radio station. Watches change at midnight, 8 a.m., and 4 p. m. In case of necessity, it would be impossible to assemble the entire crew except by messenger and at a considerable loss of time. It is proposed to provide for four of these operators at this time by providing two double quarters for their

NAVAL RADIO STATION, DUTCH HARBOR, ALASKA

Recreation building and accessories_ $12,000

Due to the weather conditions and terrain at this station, outdoor recreation facilities are impracticable for a large part of the year. Since the Department policy is to send married men to this station, recreational facilities are highly desirable and required for from 25 to 30 persons. It is believed that consideration of both health and morale indicates the necessity for a recreational building for the personnel attached to this isolated station.

The project contemplates the construction of a frame building 50 feet by 30 feet to provide for indoor exercises such as badminton, handball, volleyball, etc.

NAVAL DIRECTION FINDER STATION, POINT ST. GEORGE, CALIF. Purchase of land_ $2,500

The Point St. George naval radio direction-finder station is located on a rented site comprising 1.63 acres, more or less. This station is one of the most accurate on the Pacific coast, having station is one of the most accurate on the Pacine coast, having the least deviation of any direction-finder station in the twelfth naval district. Renewal of the annual lease at a reasonable figure is becoming increasingly difficult due to an increase in local land values, and in the event that the owner should refuse to renew the lease the Navy would be compelled to move from the site and re-locate this valuable station. Such a move would result in a considerable loss to the Government, since the cost of existing structures and equipment approximate 95,000, much of which would not be salvageable. In addition to the cost of new buildings, there would be the expense of moving equipment; the cost and inconvenience of changing charts, sailing directions, etc.; the inconvenience to mariners involved in the change; and the difficulty and delay in acquiring a suitable new site.

NAVAL DIRECTION FINDER STATION, POINT ARGUELLO, CALIF. Powerhouse, garage, and dormitory building, and accessories_ $27,000

The existing powerhouse and combined dormitory and operating building were erected in 1905 and 1906, respectively. These buildings have become antiquated and are not suitable in type of construction or lay-out for present-day needs at this isolated and remote station. It is not feasible to remodel the existing buildings and the work and expense necessary to retain them in use is far beyond their potential value.

This project contemplates the replacement of the existing powerhouse and combined operating building and dormitory by a new fireproof powerhouse and dormitory for 10 enlisted men. Because Point Arguello is one of the most important direction-finder stations on the southern California coast and is to be kept in operations the facilities for housing the means of the contemplate of the stations of the southern California coast and is to be kept in operations. tion, the facilities for housing the men and equipment should be made permanent.

Quarters and accessories_.

At the present time there are no separate quarters for the radio-man in charge, who now lives in one of the double quarters which should be made available for other married personnel attached to the station. It is considered essential that the radioman in charge be provided with separate and adequate quarters at this remote station in order to administer the affairs of the station in an efficient manner.

This project contemplates the construction of a four-room building for the radioman in charge, of a permanent character, and suitable for a man of this rank.

NAVAL DIRECTION FINDER STATION, FOLLY ISLAND, S. C.

Reconstruction of station at new location_____

The naval direction finder station at Folly Island is now located on Folly Island, in a position which is subject to beach erosion and where electrical conditions are such that bearings furnished to ships in the vicinity are erratic. For a number of years the buildings at this station have been in bad condition, and the station is kept in operation only by the expenditure of excessive funds for the maintenance of the present buildings. Permission has been granted by the Army to relocate this station on Sullivan Island, which is the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation. This station is one of the important links in the direction finder and tracking chain of stations and it is essential that it be relocated in a satisfactory position so that reliable service can be rendered to vessels in the

This project contemplates the construction of a combined barracks, compass house, and quarters building and will be located on the Army reservation at Fort Moultrie, where conditions have proved satisfactory for reliable direction-finder service and where living conditions and potable water supply and access is satisfactory to the health and contentment of the radio personnel and to the satisfactory operation of the station.

NAVAL DIRECTION FINDER STATION, POYNERS HILL, N. C.

Barracks, compass house, quarters, and accessories_____ $52,000 The buildings comprising the direction-finder station at Poyners Hill consist of temporary makeshift structures over 58 years old, having formerly been utilized by the Life Saving Service and the Coast Guard. The quarters for operators consist of one old Coast Guard building which has been remodeled to accommodate two Guard building which has been remodeled to accommodate two families and one old building which can be occupied by one married family. The inadequacy of the quarters and the general condition of the station indicate the necessity for modernization and rebuilding in order to provide satisfactory living conditions for the operators and a permanent structure for the housing of the direction-finder equipment. The existing makeshift structures are by no means of a proper nature for permanent occupancy by a naval activity, and replacement is a matter of urgent necessity both for improved radio service and adequate housing of personnel at this isolated station isolated station.

This project contemplates the construction of a combined barracks, compass house, and quarters building of permanent construction and of a type suitable to the exposed location at Poyners Hill. Accommodations will be provided for four families, combined with a direction-finder operating room, a new pump house, and double married quarters.

NAVAL DIRECTION FINDER STATION, JUPITER, FLA.

Barracks, compass house, quarters, and accessories...

The existing buildings at the Jupiter station consist of temporary buildings which have been rebuilt from time to time, due to their being damaged by hurricanes. This station is in the path of tropical hurricanes and is an important link in the direction-finder and tracking system. The rebuilding of this station in perfinder and tracking system. The rebuilding of this station in permanent construction to withstand hurricanes is essential to provide continuous direction-finder service for this section of the Atlantic coast. The buildings are badly in need of repair and are now kept in serviceable condition only by the expenditure of maintenance funds out of proportion to their value.

This project contemplates the construction of a combined barracks, compass house, and quarters building of a type suitable to the exposed location at Jupiter and of a type to withstand the tropical hurricanes which frequently occur in this area.

Floating drydock, type D, including mooring facilities

An authorization for a dock of this size and type was given in the Naval Authorization Act of April 15, 1935. An appropriation of $750,000 for the work was contained in the Naval Appropriation Act approved August 12, 1935.

The preliminary design for this dock was based in general on the design of a similar dock, the ARD-1, in service at San Diego. Exdesign of a similar dock, the ARD-1, in service at San Diego. Experience with this dock demonstrated, however, that certain changes were desirable in the new dock. Also, an increase in dimensions was necessary to accommodate the new destroyer leaders and the larger submarines. These two factors in combination with the large increase in labor and material costs indicated that the amount available was too small for a complete dock. Nevertheless, the work was proceeded with and bidding data were arranged so that various features could be added to the basic dock if available funds permitted.

Bids were opened on February 3, 1937, and four bids were received from various shipbuilding concerns. An estimate of the cost of construction of the dock was also obtained from the Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa. The low bids from the shipbuilding companies ranged from $1,982,400 for a complete dock to $1,182,000 for a bare operating dock. In comparison with these figures, the navy-yard estimates ranged from $1,861,700 to $1,213,000. All these figures were exclusive of certain accessories which were to be furnished by the Government. Under the circumstances, the award of a contract was not advisable and all bids were rejected.

The $1,710,000 authorization now requested when covered by an appropriation, will permit the construction of a dock complete in every respect and ready to perform the functions for which designed.

The ARD-1 has been very successful in operation at San Diego.

The ARD-1 has been very successful in operation at San Diego, and the provision of a dock of this type will ordinarily provide much needed docking facilities for small craft, and, in an emergency, there will be available, also, a complete docking and repair facility that can be quickly moved elsewhere.

The increased cost of a dock of this type over a graving dock of equal capacity is justified by the tactical and strategical advantages inherent in this type of structure.

[Excerpts from H. Rept. No. 281, 76th Cong., 1st sess.] NAVAL SUPPLY DEPOT, OAKLAND, CALIF.

Supply facilities on the west coast are inadequate to meet present-day demands of the fleet. As the adequacy of storage and supply facilities is of the greatest importance in the preparation of the fleet for its mission, the deficiency in these facilities is a mat-the fiest for its mission, the deficiency in these facilities is a matter of growing concern to the Navy.

The Mare Island Navy Yard is now an issuing point for supplying the fiest. Their stocks are located about 25 miles from the fleetanchorage area in San Francisco Bay. Materials requiring covered or enclosed storage have to be placed in scattered locations wherever space is available at the time of their receipt. They then have to be lightered or handled by supply ships from the yard to the anchorage ground, requiring a considerable time and involving expensive transportation and handling, damage, and waste.

There is an actual shortage of approximately 2,500,000 square feet of covered storage space on the west coast at the present time; and while this estimate is based on ships building and appropriated for, it does not take into consideration the large ship program already authorized by the Congress.

To correct these conditions and to make possible the provision of adequate stocks of stores on the west coast, which is imperative even in time of peace because of the distance of west-coast yards from the general sources of supply, it is proposed to provide these supply facilities in lower San Francisco Bay.

A suitable site has been selected at Oakland, Calif., and tentadepot of an ultimate capacity approximately equal to that of the naval supply depot at Norfolk, Va., the total development proposed providing about 1,728,000 square feet of storage area.

This bill contemplates a start toward the development of the site by providing a nucleus of needed facilities.

these stations will be increased and the reliability of the service endangered.

While additional acreage at the north end of Mare Island is unused at the present time, it is anticipated that the ultimate industrial development of this yard will require a very considerable portion of this space for industrial storage.

Establishment of a supply base for the handling of fleet and military supplies elsewhere is therefore necessary, although the committee recognizes that Mare Island must still continue to supply a considerable portion of fleet and military supplies to vessels that are docked there or are berthed for overhaul and repair.

Industrial supplies must continue to be stored at Mare Island

Industrial supplies must continue to be stored at Mare Island Navy Yard, and this storage would be more imperative even in wartime than in peacetime.

For these reasons the committee has written into the bill a definite statement that the activities of the proposed Oakland supply depot shall not overlap or encroach upon the storage of supplies, materials, and equipment required in connection with the industrial activities of the navy yard at Mare Island. Realizing that some military and fleet supplies must be put on board ships at Mare Island, it has not limited the storage of supplies at Mare Island Navy Yard solely to industrial stores.

In order that there may be no conflict whatsoever between Mare Island Navy Yard and the new proposed supply base, it has made the latter a part of the navy yard at Mare Island and placed its administration under the jurisdiction of the commandant of that area. This is done chiefly for the sake of efficiency in management but partially as a measure of economy, in order that there may not develop a duplication in administrative personnel at the new supply base, which would be costly to the country both in peacetime and in possible wartime.

The committee have strictly limited the amount authorized to be

The committee have strictly limited the amount authorized to be appropriated to not to exceed $6,500,000 for the reason that it be-lieves that this is the largest amount that can be justifiably expended in the development of any supply base on the Pacific coast. They have further limited this amount for the reason that any larger authorization would definitely tend to bring about further requests for additional facilities at the Oakland Supply Base which would definitely duplicate existing facilities at Mare Island Navy Yard.

To this duplication of existing facilities the committee is positively opposed.

The committee take the position that the establishment of the supply base at Oakland will not interfere and is not intended to interfere in any way with the continued operation of Mare Island Navy Yard as the main Navy base for the San Francisco Bay area. Navy Yard as the main Navy base for the San Francisco Bay area. The Navy now has an investment of over $34,000,000, according to official figures, in Mare Island Navy Yard. The yard is operated efficiently and economically, employing over 5,000 men, most of whom live in the immediate vicinity and who have their life savings invested in their homes there. It is neither the intention nor the desire of the committee to see existing conditions disturbed. In fact, the committee look forward hopefully to the time when it can report additional improvements at Mare Island resulting in increasing its operations as an industrial and a construction plant. ing its operations as an industrial and a construction plant.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] has asked that the committee report be printed in the RECORD, which is a very proper request, and I made no objection to it, I call attention to the fact that there were material changes in two amendments, and in order that there may be correct information in the RECORD, I ask that a memorandum relating to the two important amendments be printed following the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On May 8, 1939, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs amended the bill to include two measures pending before the Congress of great importance to the Navy Department's public works pro-

(a) A measure to authorize the acquisition of the Hunters Point drydock in San Francisco Bay, as represented by the bill H. R.

(b) A measure to provide for the construction of a drydock in New York Harbor, as represented by the bills S. 1939 and H. R. 5331.

These two amendments are sections 4 and 5 of the bill as reported to the Senate.

The amendment permits the Navy to purchase these drydocks, or if they cannot be purchased, to condemn them for national defense purposes.

The Naval Affairs Committee of the House recently reported a similar bill to the House of Representatives. This bill authorizes similar bill to the House of Representatives. This bill authorizes the Navy to purchase the Hunters Point drydocks but it adds a proviso which reads in part as follows:

"Should the Secretary of the Navy, after negotiations extending for a period of not over 90 days from the date of the enactment of this act, with the owners of said drydocks, be unable to agree with said owners upon a purchase price not to exceed for such properties $4,000,000, then and in that event, the Secretary is authorized to acquire a suitable tract of land on San Francisco Bay and to construct thereon a graving drydock capable of docking the largest struct thereon a graving drydock capable of docking the largest vessel built, building, or projected, together with buildings, accessories, and incidental facilities, at a cost not to exceed $6,000,000."

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, on May 18, 1939, recommended that this language be enacted as section 4 in lieu of the language previously recommended by the committee.

Section 5 of the bill as reported by the committee on May 8, 1939, authorized the construction in New York Harbor of a drydock of sufficient size and capacity to accommodate the largest naval vessel or merchant vessel built, building, or projected. It permits the United States to bear one-half the cost of the proposed dock, including the cost of the site and accessories, but not to exceed $3,500,000, in return for which the United States would obtain the use of the dock in a preferred status for its war and its largest merchant vessels.

The House Naval Affairs Committee tabled a similar bill in the House of Representatives authorizing the Federal Government to assist private capital in the construction of a drydock in New York

The Navy Department now recommends that the drydock at South The Navy Department now recommends that the drydock at South Boston, Mass., which is owned by the Navy Department and which is large enough to take the largest ship built, building, or projected, be equipped to make repairs to naval vessels. On May 18 the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate recommended that a new section be added to the bill in lieu of section 5, previously recommended. The new section provides that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to proceed with the construction of such public works and utilities, including buildings and accessories, as are needed to equip South Boston drydock for use as an annex of the Boston Navy Yard in the repair of naval vessels and authorized appropriation not to exceed $2.545.000 for this purpose. exceed $2,545,000 for this purpose.

NATIONAL HIGHWAY IN PANAMA

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Sanate recur to Calendar No. 434, Senate bill 2163, and that the bill be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2163) to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes, which was read, as follows:

Whereas the United States now has under lease an area of about 19,000 acres in the vicinity of Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, a distance of approximately 70 miles west of the Canal Zone, which is being developed and used as a landing field, bombing range, and training center for the Air Corps units established in the Canal Zone: and

Whereas the present road facilities between Chorrera and Rio

Hato, Republic of Panama, are inadequate to accommodate the heavy traffic necessary in event of hostilities: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of not to exceed $1,500,000, to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to congrete with the Republic of Reserve to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in connection with the construction of a highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, in the Republic of Panama: Provided, That the expenditure of such sum shall be subject to the receipt of assurances satisfactory to the President from the Government of the Republic of Panama of its cooperation in such construction.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill is worthy of explanation. Will not the Senator from Indiana explain it briefly?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in Panama, about 85 or 90 miles from the Canal Zone itself, is an auxiliary aviation field known as Rio Hato. It is a natural field, one of the finest natural aviation fields the aviators of our Army have ever seen. We have bombers there, a part of our Aviation Corps, at Rio Hato, all the time. There are about 19,000 acres in the whole area. There is no highway to the field at all. It is possible to reach it only by flying.

The Government of the United States has entered into an understanding with the Republic of Panama under which Panama will cooperate in building a highway from the Canal Zone to Rio Hato. My understanding is that the Government of Panama has agreed to provide the right-of-way and the labor to construct the highway, if our Government will furnish the material.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. If this highway would extend for 80 or 90 miles through Panamanian territory, people living between Rio Hato and the Canal Zone who are Panamanians could use the highway coming and going, could they not?

Mr. MINTON. They could.

Mr. HAYDEN. It would open up the Panamanian terri-

Mr. MINTON. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. And therefore the Panamanian Government would be interested in having the highway constructed. It would benefit its people. Our Government would benefit by reason of obtaining access to the airport.

Mr. MINTON. Yes. As I said a while ago, there is not any other road there; and, as the Senator from Arizona has said, the construction of the road would not only benefit us, but it would likewise benefit those whose territory would be opened up between the Canal Zone and the airport.

Mr. HAYDEN. For that reason it would seem to me proper that the Panamanian Government should contribute toward the construction of the road.

Mr. MINTON. My understanding is they are willing to contribute the right-of-way and the labor.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount of the obligation imposed on our Government?

Mr. MINTON. It is not definitely fixed, but it is estimated the cost will not exceed one and one-half million dollars. The highway will be something like 85 miles long. It is quite an extensive undertaking, because there is no right-of-way there at all. There is no road there of any kind at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. Was the matter brought before the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. MINTON. It was recommended by the War Department and unanimously approved by the Military Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of glory and Lord of love, help us to commit our ways unto Thee and trust in Thee, for all Thy paths are mercy and truth unto such as keep Thy covenant. We pray that we may walk the way of life in holy confidence. We earnestly beseech Thee to be with our country; may industry turn its wheels more and more until countless workers shall have employment and bread enough and to spare. We pray for the rich that they may help the poor, for the strong that they may stoop to the weak. Oh, help us all to live that life that shall be good enough to last forever. Inspire us with a boundless faith founded on the revelation of Thy will, and bring us at last to see Thy face in peace. In the holy name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 6149. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1164) entitled "An act for the relief of Nadine Sanders." requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Logan, Mr. Burke, and | Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INLAND WATERWAY AND ARGENTINE BEEF

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday certain misguided Democrats in the House, under the pressure of misleading railroad propaganda, joined with the Old Guard Republicans in defeating the administration's inland waterway program by striking the Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterways project, the Columbia River project and the Connecticut River project, from the river and harbor bill, and then proceeded, according to the morning papers, to the dining room to eat their lunches of Argentine beef.

Regardless of the demagogic abuses that have been heaped upon President Roosevelt about the purchase of a small amount of Argentine beef for the Navy, his critics do not seem to realize that by that movement he was probably rendering a service to the American farmers by forcibly bringing to public attention the fact, that because of the exorbitant freight rates in this country, the people along the Atlantic seaboard are eating beef from the Argentine, because it is cheaper to ship it from that far country around Cape Horn, or up through the Panama Canal, and deliver it throughout the Northeastern States, as well as here in Washington, than it is to pay the exorbitant freight rates the railroads are now charging to ship beef from the cattlegrowing States of the South and West.

The insinuation that President Roosevelt would intentionally injure the American farmers is a vile slander unbecoming a Member of the Congress of the United States.

Sometimes it takes a thunderbolt to arouse a sleeping community to lurking dangers. As sound asleep as the Old Guard Republicans and a few subservient Democrats appear to be on the question of transportation, it seems that nothing short of a stroke of this kind could arouse them to a realization of the merciless penalties to which the American people, and especially the American farmers, are subjected in overcharges and discriminations in transportation rates now imposed by the railroads of this country.

You can ship beef from the Argentine, or fruit, cotton, or vegetables from Brazil, or sugar from the Philippines, or coal from Russia, or lumber from Paraguay and deliver them to the people in the northeastern portion of the United States, where the majority of our population now reside, cheaper than you can ship cattle from Texas, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or Missouri, corn from Illinois, fruit from Florida, coal from Alabama or Kentucky, sugar from Louisiana or Colorado, or lumber, cotton, limestone, asphalt, and other raw materials from the South and lay them down to the people of the great northeastern section of the country.

No wonder the railroads fight all waterway projects.

Let us develop our own resources, give our own people reasonable transportation rates, and develop America for Americans. [Applause.]

CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN BILLS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order at any time for the House to consider the joint resolutions and bills H. J. Res. 247, H. J. Res. 248, and S. 1096, H. R. 5498 or S. 1569 and H. R. 4539 under the general rules of the House; that debate on each bill be limited to not exceeding 1 hour, the time to be controlled one-half by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that all of these bills have come from the Agricultural Committee with practically a unanimous report?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think all of them have been reported unanimously.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. By the gentleman's request he simply avoids going to the Rules Committee and consuming more time than will be needed on any single bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Each one of these bills will be considered in the regular way, and there will be opportunity for debate and the offering of amendments?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones]?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, this will eliminate bringing in a special rule on these minor bills?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; there are two or three other bills involved.

Mr. SABATH. All of these bills have been unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. I do not think there is an exception. There might be in the case of one or two bills but I think not.

Mr. SABATH. If any of the bills have been objected to, that might be different.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is not a minority report on any of them.

Mr. SABATH. I shall be obliged to object in the case of those bills where there may be objection because I have in good faith entered into an agreement with the minority members of the Rules Committee that we will give the minority members a chance and opportunity at all times to appear before any rule is granted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman that the minority members are not objecting to this.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have consulted with the minority members and they do not object.

Mr. SABATH. The minority members on the Rules Com-

Mr. RAYBURN. They are not asking the Rules Committee for a rule.

Mr. SABATH. It is a question whether or not the agreement that has been entered into relative to hearing on rules which makes in order these bills applies also to the unanimous consent which the gentleman is seeking to obtain now so far as these bills are concerned and which he otherwise would have to have a special rule on.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, if the House can operate by unanimous consent it is much better.

Mr. SABATH. That is my thought.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee, has consulted with the minority members of the committee, and this is agreeable to them. I consulted with the minority leader and it was entirely satisfactory to him, after consulting with the minority members on the Committee on Agriculture. This is a usual and a very expeditious way to do business.

Mr. SABATH. I am in favor of it. I desire to save time in the hope that we may be able to adjourn as early as possible.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have not included in this request three bills on which there is controversy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, my time does not permit a longer expression on this occasion immediately subsequent to Mother's Day of a proper tribute to the mothers of America, so I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief editorial which appeared in many papers in my district and which has been clipped and sent to me by many fine American mothers, many of whom are known to me in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, this editorial is as follows:

MOTHER'S DAY MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Mothers of America:

Do you want to help to keep your country out of war?

Do you want to spare your sons from service and from probable injury and death in a foreign war which is no concern of their

Do you want to spare yourselves from being the gold-star mothers of the future?

Then sign and send this Mother's Day message to your Congressmen and Senators, who, while having the power to make war, have also the power and duty to keep America at peace.

To the Congress of the United States:

On May 8, 1914, the Congress of the United States officially established the observance of Mother's Day.

Three months later the World War was in progress.

And 3 years later the United States was, by act of Congress in that war, and the sons of American mothers were fighting and dying on foreign battlefields.

This year Mother's Day finds the United States confronted by dying on Ioreign battlefields.

This year Mother's Day finds the United States confronted by the same awful possibility and peril.

It must not happen again.

While the mothers of America will make any sacrifice, including the lives of their sons, for the defense of the United States, they demand to be spared the futile and senseless tragedy of American participation in a foreign war in which our country has no business or concern ness or concern.

The Congress of the United States should not use the power to make war to destroy our sons and our country.

Keep us out of foreign alliances, intrigues, and entanglements, as George Washington wisely admonished the United States to do.

Keep us out of war!

That is the Mother's Day message from the women of America to the Congress of the United States.

(Signed) Mrs. F. E. GOODWYN.

SUGAR PROGRAM

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to quote certain tables furnished by the Department showing the capitalization of the processors and the profits, together with the amounts of money paid by the processors to the growers of sugar beets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, on May 10 our colleague from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff] made a speech which attracted my attention. His opening sentence was:

The policy of the New Deal administration, which for the past 6 years has constantly been to gradually eliminate the sugar industry of the United States—particularly the beet-sugar industry is still being pursued.

My interest was immediately aroused because of the fact that one of the few really prosperous agricultural activities in my district during the past year has been the growing of sugar beets under one of our great irrigation projects in Malheur County. Our settlers there have been rejoicing in their good fortune in having had constructed recently a fine modern sugar-beet plant, the financial success of which is of the utmost importance to the farmers who raise the beets, as well as to the processors. I was also once a grower of many acres of sugar beets and have had practical experience in marketing under the old methods.

I do admit that we in Oregon have had, and are now having, our difficulties under the quota system as related to both acreage and marketing. I will not take the time to rehearse those troubles, but I do wish to say that I believe the processor must enjoy the right to sell his manufactured stock of sugar just as freely as possible. I have learned that we must approach these marketing and control problems in the cooperative spirit, and should not be misled by criticism unless it is borne out by facts. For this reason I have taken some pains to examine into the facts in connection with the administration's sugar program and its results in general. I have a high regard for the Secretary of Agriculture and believe he is trying to do right, and is guided by sincerity and a desire to initiate procedures which will be most beneficial to all involved-producers, processors, and consumers.

I join with my colleague in regretting that we have not made greater progress in increasing the production within the continental United States. Reliable figures do, however, show that we are now producing nearly twice as much sugar (beet and cane) as was being produced just prior to this administration. So, in the spirit of giving the devil his due I call upon my discontented colleague to note some of the facts showing what progress has been made under the difficult conditions of this period of "stress and strain."

I investigated the Michigan situation about which he spoke and learned that, during the last 5 years under the Coolidge-Hoover administrations when our colleague's party was in power, the Michigan Sugar Co., the largest sugar-beet company in his State, suffered losses totaling a million and a half dollars. I also find that under the same administrations the owners' equities in the company decreased from $14,000,000 in 1929 to $6,725,000 in 1933. In contrast, I note that during the last 5 years, under the Roosevelt administration, that Michigan company made a profit of $1,150,000 and that the owners' equities have increased to approximately $8,000,000.

Our colleague from Michigan alleges that the sugar industry in Michigan is being strangled. I find that in the 5-year period, 1928 to 1932, Michigan had an average of only 10 sugar factories operating. In the 5 years of the sugar program, 1934 to 1938, there were 13, and present indications are they will all operate this year. In the 5-year period, from 1928 to 1932, the average annual harvested sugar-beet acreage in his State was only 75,000 acres. In 1938 the acreage was almost twice as great-140,000 acres.

The facts are that the total sugar-beet acreage in the United States increased from 717,000 acres in the period from 1928 to 1932, to an average of 809,000 acres in the period from 1933 to 1937, while in 1938 the acreage harvested was 931,000 acres—the greatest on record, except for the one year, 1933. It seems to me, therefore, that if, as the gentleman from Michigan insists, the New Deal has tried to wipe out the sugar industry of the United States, it has surely proceeded in a very bungling fashion.

In other words, under the Roosevelt administration, processors' profits have been increased, growers' returns are greater, beet labor is better paid, little children have been taken out of the beet fields, American sugar production has reached a record high point, price of sugar to consumers has been low, only speculators have suffered any hurt or Under the previous administration processors neared bankruptcy, growers were in distress, child labor operated in the beet fields, production was low, wages were low, speculators succeeded in getting all the profits.

Now, in order to make these facts apparent graphically, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record some simple and accurate tables showing the income of sugar-beet processors during each of the last 10 years, and also the financial returns to sugar-beet growers for the last 7 years. The table on processor profits is taken from page 18 of the preliminary report of the sugar division on processor-grower relations, recently issued. In the first table data with respect to the net income of sugar-beet processors for the period 1929-38 have been assembled and expressed as a percentage of the average net worth. The figures are taken from Farr's Manual of Sugar Companies, Moody's Manual, and other reliable sources.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have just filed a resolution calling for an investigation of the dangerous situation rapidly developing in the Philippine Islands.

In view of Japan's recent naval victories taking over strategic neighboring islands in an encirclement movement, and also in view of the widespread infiltration and peaceful conquest of the Philippines on the part of the Japanese, aided and abetted by certain Filipino officials and politicians, this is an important and a serious problem, involving as it does not only our own peace and welfare but also our investments there, estimated at about $840,000,000—investments by this Government in the last 40 years, and of our citizens.

Widespread demands aided by Japanese propagandists are being made for a plebiscite to determine whether to demand immediate independence or wait till 1946, as the present Independence Act provides.

In view of the action of the House on February 23 striking out the Guam proposal-205 to 168-I assume there is a majority in this body who would, in the interest of peace, vote to cut loose from the Philippines also. My resolution calls for an immediate investigation of the whole problem to determine whether we should immediately withdraw now, before being embroiled in a war in the Pacific, or whether we should clean up the traitorous pro-Japanese and highly inflammable situation. I hope the Members will study this situation and my resolution carefully.

Whereas the people of the United States have a total investment in the Philippine Islands estimated at $840,000,000, of which $45,-000,000 is invested in Philippine government bonds guaranteed by the United States Government and $95,000,000 is invested in com-mercial ventures, and $700,000,000 by the Government of the United States; and

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, last week there was celebrated in my district the golden jubilee of one of the largest woolen industries of my district. At that time a very comprehensive and instructive address was delivered by a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Honorable Charles B. Henderson. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include this address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, the address to which I have referred is as follows:

Address Delivered by Charles B. Henderson, Director, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, May 11, 1939, at the Golden Jubilee of Botany Worsted Mills, 1889-1939

It is a great pleasure for me to be present at the fiftieth anniversary of Botany Worsted Mills.

Chairman, Jesse H. Jones, has asked me to express to you his sincere regrets that he cannot be present on this occasion, and in behalf of our Board of Directors to extend to you our cordial greetings and our sincere interests in the well-being of your company.

This notable occasion reminds me of the custom of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of married couples, which throughout the ages has symbolized gold. Just as there are many trials and tribulations in 50 years of married life, so has Botany gone through many vicissitudes and trying experiences in its 50 years of existence. But your organization, under courageous leadership of men like Colonel Johnson, has met all obstacles with courage, energy, and perseverance; on your golden anniversary you stand at the threshold of what we all hope and believe will be a golden era.

Let us consider for a moment the place of Botany Worsted Mills in its community. Fifty years ago, when Eduard Stoehr, of Leipzig, bought some land and built a spinning mill at Passaic, it was a little village of less than 3,000 in the midst of a farming of Leipzig, bought some land and built a spinning mill at Passaic, it was a little village of less than 3,000 in the midst of a farming country. The first plant was successful, and Eduard Stochr built a weaving plant, then a dyeing and finishing plant. Men of the highest skill were brought to the plants, and the first impetus was given to the industrial growth of Passaic. The success of Botany Worsted Mills attracted other industries, until today Passaic and the surrounding cities form a great industrial area of 150,000 people—a far cry from the little farming center of 1889. Throughout all these years, the great Botany Mills have formed the backbone of the community. With a normal employment of more than 4,000 persons, and adding the dependents of these employees, it is probable that over 20,000 people are vitally concerned with the fortunes of Botany.

As you all know, the difficulties with which Botany Worsted Mills have had to contend—and which at times have appeared almost insurmountable—have not been peculiar to your company, but have confronted woolen manufacturers generally, and, indeed, almost the entire textile industry. During and after the war, an abnormal demand resulted in a great expansion in textile productive capacity, and the output per machine also increased due to improved machinery. This brought about a large overcapacity, intensifying competition and reducing profit margins.

In the wool industry, there began as far back as 1924 a steady increase in the percentage of idle looms to total looms in place. In 1923, for example, 81 percent of the total looms were active; by 1925 this percentage had dropped to 69 percent, and it declined without interruption to a low of 39 percent in 1932. Style changes and growing competition from rayon likewise hampered the wool trade, so that wool consumption fell from an average of 386,000,000 pounds in the five years 1920–24, to 349,000,000 or 386,000,000 pounds in the five years 1920-24, to 349,000,000 pounds in 1925-29, and 270,000,000 pounds in 1930-34.

the wool trade, so that wool consumption fell from an average of 386,000,000 pounds in the five years 1920–24, to 349,000,000 pounds in 1925–29, and 270,000,000 pounds in 1930–34.

Under these circumstances, the industry could hardly be expected to make adequate profits, and during the depression the situation became acute. The picture is clearly revealed by the income reports of textile manufacturers made to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, covering about 15,000 textile concerns. In the 3 years 1927-29 combined, these concerns were able to show net earnings of $653,000,000; but in the next 3 depression years, 1930-32, they reported a deficit of $809,000,000. Even more illuminating is the proportion of the total which reported deficits; in 1927-29 about 41 percent of the total number showed deficits, while in 1930, 60 percent reported a loss; in 1931, 65 percent, and in 1932, 81 percent.

As to the woolen and worsted goods industry alone, an analysis by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, covering about 600 concerns from 1926 through 1935, shows that in 7 of the 10 years less than half of these companies reported a profit, the low point being in 1932, when 86 percent had a deficit. Moreover, in 7 out of 10 years, the combined net earnings of all companies were in the red, the total losses in these years exceeding the total profits in the other 3 years by a very large margin.

profits in the other 3 years by a very large margin.

This, then, was the background of the industry at the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made its first advance to Botany in 1934. Another important factor in the case was the local situation in and around Passaic, and the importance of Botany to the welfare of that community. At the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was asked for aid, 18 manufacturing companies in Passaic poration was asked for aid, is manufacturing companies in Passaic and the surrounding towns, employing over 8,000 persons, had already closed, failed, or moved. Eight of the banks were closed or merged; 2 were open in full, and 1 was open under restrictions. The disastrous effect of closing the Botany Mills, normally employing 4,000 or more, can be easily visualized.

As already indicated, it was clearly evident in 1934, that Botany was not the only weekers.

As already indicated, it was clearly evident in 1934, that Botany was not the only woolen firm struggling against heavy obstacles, and that the business recovery afforded the company a chance to work out of its troubles, under its progressive management and secure place in the trade which it enjoyed. This view proved to be justified by the progress made by Botany since 1934, and by the wool industry in general. While many problems remain, the industry has definitely improved since that time. For example, much idle machinery has been scrapped; the reduction of installed looms in the past several years has been about 27 percent. The percentage of active to total looms advanced from 39 percent in 1932 to 67 percent in 1937, and wool consumption rose 54 percent in the same period. While mill activity dropped off sharply in the last half of 1937 and early 1938, it showed a rapid rise thereafter and further gains are anticipated.

The loans to Botany Worsted Mills illustrate the kind of aid

The loans to Botany Worsted Mills illustrate the kind of aid extended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to industry, and I think a brief description of these business loans will be interesting to you.

The long depression caused the failure of many business firms and, of course, greatly weakened the financial condition of many of those which were able to carry on. When recovery finally began, about the middle of 1933, a considerable number of concerns found their working capital so badly depleted that they were hardly able to meet the day-to-day expenses of running their business. Efforts to secure credit from the usual sources frequently proved unsuccessful.

This situation brought a demand for credit not being supplied through normal channels. To meet this demand the Reconstruction Finance Corporation commenced to make business loans in the fall of 1933. Since then its powers under the law have been broadened broadened.

The Corporation has authorized 7,849 loans to business enterprises totaling $422,768,190.47 (including $82,351,166.67 commitments outstanding). Banks have participated in 1,878 of these loans and commitments for an additional $66,096,047.55, making a grand total of $488,864,238.02 authorized. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has disbursed $166,629,204.09, and participating banks have disbursed $52,322,426.64, making $218,949,630.73 in all. A substantial number of loans have been withdrawn or canceled because the borrowers found they were able to secure funds elsewhere after the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had approved the loans.

Business loans authorized have involved the maintenance or addition of 657,819 employees. It is also interesting to note that judging from the size of loans, by far the greater number have been made to the little business concerns. Thirty-seven percent of the number of loans authorized are for $5,000 or less, and 34 percent are from $5,001 to $25,000, making a total of 71 percent that were authorized for $25,000 or less. As to loans which are commonly regarded as large, the real measure of helpfulness can only be computed in terms of the thousands of employees and their families to whom the proceeds of such loans eventually are paid out as wages.

We have authorized loans and commitments to 561 textile com-

We have authorized loans and commitments to 561 textile companies totaling $62,594,250, of which $35,051,697 has been disbursed. These 561 textile borrowers include 85 cotton-goods manufacturers, 48 woolen-goods manufacturers, 39 silk and rayon, 31 dyeing and finishing, 110 knit goods and hosiery, 146 apparel, and 102 miscellaneous.

Our business loans authorized in New Jersey number 267, for a total of $22,230,391.80, of which $12,908,356.19 has been disbursed. Of the amount disbursed $3,815,917.48 has been repaid or 29.6 percent.

In what way has Botany and the community around Passaic been benefited by these activities? It enabled Botany to furnish 33,718,-000 man-hours of work, involving $21,874,000 in wages, from 1934 to the end of 1938; it enabled Botany to clear up its warehousing and inventory loans and to complete the reorganization of the holding company. As a result Botany was able to devote its energies to the business of selling and manufacturing, and in the first 3 months of 1939 Botany had manufactured, sold, and delivered over $4,000,000 worth of merchandise, equivalent to the entire output, sales, and deliveries for the first 6 months of the year 1938. For the first quarter of 1939, Botany's pay rolls averaged from $110,000 to $128,000 weekly, and employment averaged 5,600 people.

In the spring of 1889 one

In closing may I tell you what happened 50 years ago in northeastern Nevada? The winter of 1888 and 1889 was the severest ever known in that section of the State. The thermometer registered more than 60° below zero, and snow fell to great depths over the country. My father owned the little bank at Elko, and for 10 years had been financing the livestock men. In the spring of 1889 one by one these sturdy cattlemen and ranchers came to the bank and told of their great losses, and said, "Jeff, take the outfit, it's yours; I'm busted." I could see that my father was greatly worried. A little later he called all these borrowers in, and going over the situation said, "If you are broke, I am. We must all stick together. If I can arrange to finance you to restock your ranges, will you stick with me?" In one breath they replied, "Jeff, if you can do that we will stick by you 'til Hell freezes over." Father went to San Francisco and through the banks there raised the money to restock these cattlemen. They stuck, and by 1900 nearly all of them were out of debt. The banks at San Francisco helped us then; only the Federal Government could help us in 1932, when the thermometer not only froze, but busted.

There is no telling what would have happened to my father and that community if these men had not stuck. There is no telling what would have been Botany's fate had it not been for the great loyalty of every employee of Botany and the indomitable will, tireless energy, and hard work of all, from Colonel Johnson throughout the entire organization.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the most insistent demand that comes up to us from all parts of the country is for a change of the Wagner Act and for a new board. The demand is for a just law and for a fair board. It is the unanimous opinion of informed people throughout the country that the law is not just; that the Board is not fair; and that we have had bad administration of the law we have.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the Record and include therein a letter written to Attorney General Murphy and a resolution directed to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, John Lewis and the C. I. O. by their acts are repudiating the law and the actions of the National Labor Relations Board. This may be news to some. The law provides and the Board has consistently held that it is an unfair labor practice for an employer to tell his men they should join or should not join a particular union. Last week Lewis announced that no one could work in the soft-coal mines until he had joined the United Mine Workers. He now calls upon the operators of those mines to make it a condition for employment that the employees join the United Mine Workers Association. Think that over and see where Brother John and his C. I. O. are getting, and whether or not he is now demanding, while opposing the federation's amendments, that these operators violate this law.

Lewis and the C. I. O. oppose any amendment of the National Labor Relations Act. That act provides that it is an unfair labor practice for an employer to influence his employees to join any particular union. Nevertheless, John L. Lewis now demands that the mines of Kentucky shall remain closed, the soft-coal miners remain idle, unless the operators do that which the law forbids; that is, tell their employees that they cannot work until they have joined Lewis' United Mine Workers.

The Department of Justice has sent investigators to Harlan County, Ky., to learn, according to the papers, whether the civil liberties of residents of that county are being denied to them.

To get the viewpoint of the Department of Justice as to whether in this country it is a denial of civil liberty to prevent a man working, the following letter has been directed by me to the Attorney General:

MY DEAR SIR: Under the N. L. R. A., is it an unfair labor practice:

1. For an employer to advice his employee (a) that he should or that he must join a particular union; (b) that he should not or that he must not join a particular union?

2. For an employer, at the demand of a union or a union official, to tell those seeking employment with him that, as a condition to the giving of that employment, the applicant must be a member of a union?

It is reported in the press that John L. Lewis, acting as representative of the United Mine Workers, has demanded that all miners seeking to dig coal in certain mines must belong to the United Mine Workers of America. Does such demand, if enforced, deprive those who do not wish to become members of such union, of their civil liberties?

Respectfully submitted.

His reply is awaited with interest. [Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an article written by David Lawrence that appeared in the Evening Star of Washington last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, the present wage and hour law threatens to annihilate the small shoe factories of this country, and I have asked for this opportunity to inform Members of the House that on next week, May 25, the hearing will be held before the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor, and those Members who have small shoe factories in their districts will be given an opportunity to be heard at that

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks I delivered on George Washington's advice over the intercity network.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand the Senate has retained the provision which is known as "Buy American," which would not permit the purchase of foreign beef.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And in the other amendments there has not been any increase in the total amount carried in the bill?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The total amount is less by some hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Senate retained the provisions in the bill for the construction of those $116,000,000 battleships.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. There were no $116,000,000 battleship appropriations in the bill.

Mr. RICH. There seems to be a difference of opinion among some of the members of the subcommittee about that.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The bill provides for the construction of two 45,000-ton battleships, for which $1,500,000 is appropriated.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman what the cost is going to be?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Ninety-three million dollars each is the cost estimated by the Navy Department.

Mr. RICH. Some of the members of the subcommittee made the statement before the full Committee on Appropriations that they would cost $116,000,000.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. They appear to have more information than the Navy Department. Their estimate is $93,000.000.

Mr. RICH. I just wanted to know about that, because there is such a difference in the estimates with respect to the cost of these battleships.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY AND THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE APPROPRIATION EILL, 1940

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6392, with Mr. COOLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I-DEPARTMENT OF STATE OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Salaries: For Secretary of State; Under Secretary of State, $10,000; counselor, $10,000; and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including temporary employees, and not to exceed $6,500 for employees engaged on piecework at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of State; $2,183,500: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the four Assistant Secretaries of State and the legal adviser of the Department of State, the Assistant to the Attorney General, the Assistant Solicitor General, and six Assistant Attorneys General, the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, the As-Attorneys General, the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, the Assistant Secretary and the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in universal in marketions. exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriagrade in the same of a different but add, offset, of other appropriation unit, or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "the Assistant Secretary and the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor."

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to carry that language in this bill any longer. The Department of Labor is not included in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, reciprocal-trade treaties: For personal services to be expended by the Secretary of State without regard to civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended,

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to this paragraph upon the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, in that it provides that the appropriation shall be expended "without regard to civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the gentleman is really serious in making the point of order. This provision is subject to the Classification Act of 1923, and I think it is clearly in order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, in reply I might say that I assume that the chairman of the committee is not very serious when he says that, in his opinion, this paragraph is in order. As the Chair knows, legislation on an appropriation bill is not in order unless it retrenches expenditures. The law provides that all employees of the Government are subject to the Classification Act and the civil-service laws unless otherwise provided by law. This clearly repeals or modifies the classification law and the civil-service law as far as these employees are concerned, and there is no pretense of reducing appropriations by so doing. It seems to me it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I really seriously ask the gentleman from Michigan if he is going to insist on the point of order. This matter was set up a few years ago, and these employees are engaged in this service and are highly technical and trained in the work in which they are engaged. The work has been carried on for several years, and if the gentleman insists upon his point of order, it is going to mean, and he knows well it is going to mean that the paragraph will be very seriously challenged.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am not arguing the merits of the reciprocal-trade program, but I am surprised that the State Department especially comes in here and asks for the privilege of making appointments without regard to the civil service and to the Classification Act. The argument the gentleman from South Carolina makes is made against all civil-service legislation. This is a blanket provision which includes stenographers and everyone else employed upon this work whether he is an expert or not. I think I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Of course the gentleman is aware of the fact that this identical language has been carried in this bill for 4 years. I am not going to assume that the gentleman has been asleep for 4 years and just now recognizes there is such a thing in the bill.

Mr. MAPES. If it has been carried for 4 years, it is permanent work, and the employees engaged in it should come under the civil-service laws and the Classification Act the same as other employees of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further remarks, if the gentleman insists upon the point of

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from South Carolina can point to some authority to the contrary, the Chair thinks that this is clearly subject to the point of order. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does that strike out the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. TREADWAY. So that a motion to do away with the appropriation is already taken care of in that respect?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman from South Carolina intend to offer it in a form that would make it in order?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I am not going to assume the responsibility for that. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] has raised the point of order and he will have to assume the responsibility for it now.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I think if ever we did a good job today, we did it in striking out this paragraph for $225,000 for reciprocal-trade agreements. To confirm that opinion, all we have to do is to recall the reciprocal-trade agreements that have been made with foreign countries and the fact that we have permitted the importation of farm produce and manufactured articles to the extent under these reciprocal-trade agreements that our American manufacturers are being put out of business by competition from foreign countries. We can recall how the farmers of this country are compelled to have their land lie idle, farmers who are receiving small prices for their commodities because of increased imports of farm and dairy produce, particularly when we think of the 12,000,000 men who are unemployed, and that we are in this way doing more to take care of the people in foreign countries than we are in looking after our own people. People who live under the Stars and Stripes are entitled to its protection—the American labor, and American industry, and the American agriculture. In the name of America why do we permit such things to happen? Do you think more of the farmers of some foreign country than our own farmers? Do you think more of the workers of foreign countries than our own American workers-men and women who want jobs; men and women who want to work for a livelihood for themselves and their families? It is time we think in terms of our American worker and American farmer. What this New Deal means in helping others before it helps our own I cannot understand. I am for American farmer and American labor first. Then if we can help others, it is O. K. to do so.

When that old American flag waves over these people of ours it means that we ought to take care of them. It is a symbol of protection and freedom to our people. But when we are doing more by the reciprocal-trade agreements to look after people in foreign nations, then I say we did a very fine thing by cutting out this appropriation to put a staff of men to work to help foreigners at the expense of our own people, even though we had to do it on a point of order. I would very much prefer to have seen that stricken by a vote of the Representatives, by the majority party giving us a vote that would put these reciprocal-trade agreements some place where they cannot be doing the injury they are to our American people.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RABAUT. Is the gentleman entirely unmindful of the great automobile industry in this country, and does he not know that it is the first industry in this country and that the reciprocal-trade agreements have been very beneficial to it?

Mr. RICH. There is no use trying to keep our automobile plants in operation when we ruin our farmers and all other kinds of manufacturing establishments, just in order to give the automobile industry a joy ride. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. Does the gentleman know that the farmer was the largest buyer of automobiles in 1937?

Mr. RICH. Well, let the American farmers buy American automobiles.

Mr. RABAUT. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. RICH. But let us not go automobile crazy. That is the trouble with us in this country. We are taking the greatest joy ride we ever had and we are ruining all other kinds of business. I am for the American automobile industry, but I do not want to see that industry put at the top of all industries in this country. Our greatest duty is to give employment to our American citizens. The next thing we have to do is to take care of the American farmers, so that they can be prosperous, and then our American industries will be pros-

Let me give you a little food for thought on what has happened in the last 3 years since we have permitted reciprocal-trade agreements to import fabric-something that I know a little something about:

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The rising tide of fabric imports is manifest from the figures for the first quarter of 1939. During the first 3 months of this year we imported 1,275,241 square yards of worsteds, as against 477,324 square yards in the corresponding period of 1938. Imports of woolens in the 3 months ended March 31, 1939, amounted to 2,381,875 square yards, compared with 1,544,984 square yards in the same period a year ago.

Suffice it to say that the volume of woolens and worsteds imported during the first quarter exceeded by far all the yardage cut for suits, topcoats, and overcoats in the Rochester market cut for suits, topcoats, and overcoats in the Rochester market during all of last year.

Granted that the yardage imported for the quarter had been manufactured in this country, over 6,000 additional American textile operators could have been fully employed for 3 months at prevailing wage rates.

Oh, why do we not protect our American worker and our American manufacturer? We will buy more automobiles if our American worker has a job, if our American farmer raises and sells the produce consumed in America. The best market in all the world. One hundred and thirty million Americans produce as good a market as 500,000,000 Europeans or 1,000,000,000 Asiatics. Congress should make our trade agreements, not a lot of professors or clerks under the guidance of the Secretary of State and the President. Congress, assume your authority. Do not delegate it to others when you know they are making a mess of it. It is time to save our jobs and our people before it is too late.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to supplement what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has said about the iniquity of the trade-treaty program. I was prepared to make the motion to strike out this item if it had not been eliminated on a point of order. It provides $225,000 to further the importation of competitive foreign products which displace the products of our own farms and factories, and thereby to destroy American industry and add to the ranks of the unemployed. The State Department has already done sufficient damage to American producers under the trade-treaty program without our providing still more impractical theorists to sit with foreign emissaries behind barred doors and still further surrender our rich home market to the world. The State Department ought to confine its activities to foreign affairs and let the Congress write our tariff laws, as the Constitution provides.

What I am saying now has more or less to do with the expectation that the administration will endeavor to reinsert this item in the other body. I want particularly to call attention to exactly what is happening. In the independent offices appropriation bill a few weeks ago an appropriation of $927,000 was made for the support of the Tariff Commission. The work of the Tariff Commission has absolutely been nullified by the trade-treaty program. They are simply clerks in behalf of the trade-treaty negotiators. There is no question about that. That body was set up as an independent institution to carry out the mandate of Congress that tariffs should be adjusted up or down to equalize the difference in foreign and domestic production costs. That was the purpose of the Tariff Commission under the law, but it has been supplemental to this hobby of the Secretary of State to bring about a downward revision of the tariff under trade treaties without regard to foreign competitive advantages. In addition to the $927,000 being wasted for the reciprocal trade agreement program, we are now confronted with this item of $225,000 additional, making over $1,000,000 for clerk hire to provide the Secretary of State with information, so-called, of the character that he wants, in order to aid in the destruction of our industries.

What did the Secretary of State say before the Committee on Appropriations? Mr. McMillan asked him about the trade-treaty agreements, and Secretary of State Hull stated:

We have negotiated 21 agreements. In my opinion, this policy has been steadily gaining favor in the country as a whole.

In my opinion, this ruinous policy will defeat the Democratic Party next year. That is the difference between his opinion and mine. Who does our distinguished former colleague, the Secretary of State, see to get that information? Let him go out among the people of this country rather than to foreign countries and get public opinion. He will then find that the remark which he made in answer to Mr. McMillan's question is absolutely incorrect. You Members representing the agricultural sections of the West and the business areas know what the feeling and what the pulse of the people is with regard to this detrimental program. The people will rise in their might next year-let me tell our distinguished Secretary of State—and put into the White House a man who will have a different Secretary of State, and one interested not in foreign producers but in American home industries. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman noticed that in the language that was stricken out by the point of order these agreements were referred to as reciprocal-trade treaties. The gentleman knows, of course, that treaties must be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. TREADWAY. We have discussed this many times. We know that these agreements should not be on the statute books at all, but we are in the hands of the Philistines. A change will come about, though, in the powers that be as a result of the elections in the fall a year hence. I agree with the gentleman from South Dakota that they are designated as treaties. If they be such in fact, then to have any force or effect in law they must be confirmed by the Senate, not entered into under blanket authority to the Secretary of State to do just as he blamed pleases with the industries of this country. I for one am willing to aid in leaving this question to be decided next year by the voters of the country. Then we will see what they think as to the popularity of this buy foreign movement.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN and Mr. SABATH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN], chairman of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose, inasmuch as our Republican friends are going to make an issue of this thing, to offer an amendment restoring the $225,000 to the bill; and in order to save time I will now ask my colleague from Illinois if he will not permit me to offer this amendment at this time. Let us have the issue out on its merits.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to defer to my colleague from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Thomas S. McMillan: Page 3, following line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Salaries, reciprocal-trade treaties: For personal services in carrying out the reciprocal trade treaty program, $225,000."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the appropriation proposed is without authority of law. The law provides for reciprocal-trade agreements. The proposed amendment appropriates money for salaries under reciprocal-trade treaties. There is no authority of law for making appropriations for the negotiation of reciprocal-trade treaties. Under the Constitution treaties must be ratified by the Senate. This is not contemplated by the law under which the reciprocal-trade agreements are entered into. There is, therefore, no authority of law for an appropriation for salaries to carry out reciprocal trade treaties.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman be agreeable to this amendment if I strike out the word "treaties" and insert in lieu thereof the word "agreements"?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will not make a point of order against it.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the word "treaties" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "agreements."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Thomas S. McMillan: Page 3, following line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Salaries, reciprocal-trade agreements: For personal services in carrying out the reciprocal trade agreement program, $225,000."

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot agree as to a limitation of debate on this matter?

Mr. CARTER. I am uncertain at this time as to the number of Members on this side of the aisle who may desire to speak for 5 minutes. I believe this is the only item about which there will be much controversy. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that we let the debate run along for 15 or 20 minutes and then endeavor to reach an agreement. I assure the gentleman that I will not prolong the debate unduly.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, when I arose a few moments ago I did not know that the amendment now pending would be offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, it is my personal opinion that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] are both wrong when they question the statement of the Secretary of State. From hundreds of letters I receive from various industries throughout the land I am satisfied that the country favors these trade agreements. In a few instances there may have been an adverse effect from some of the agreements, but on the whole they have greatly benefited the Nation and increased our exports to a great degree. Indicative of these increases I include herewith in my remarks an excerpt from the Department of Agriculture's December 1938 issue of the Agricultural United States foreign trade with trade-agreement countries 1 and with other countries

² Preliminary.

From this it is evident that while there has been a 35percent increase in exports to countries not under trade agreements, during the period 1937-38 over 1935-36, an increase of 54 percent in exports is shown to those countries with whom trade agreements have been concluded.

Let me say to those who try to make capital out of the Argentine corned-beef incident that our exports to Argentina during the year 1938 increased by nearly $31,000,000. In other words, we have nearly doubled our exports to Argentina, and our exports are over $41,000,000 greater than our imports.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. SABATH. No; I cannot yield.

To those Republicans who day in and day out prophesy as to what will happen in 1940, let me say that they are as poor prophets today as they were in 1932 and 1936, and that their statements would be much more interesting if they could demonstrate their sincerity in trying to help the country instead of playing politics. The people are onto you, they are onto anyone nowadays who plays politics at the expense of the country.

I concede that conditions are not what they should be or what they would be if you gentlemen and those who oppose President Roosevelt had cooperated instead of opposing every effort that has been made. You owe it to yourself and to the country to cease this course of feeding politics and bunkum to the people.

The farmers are receiving much more today for their produce than they did in 1931, 1932, and the beginning of 1933. I would like to see them get a good deal more. I would like to see the price of wheat raised to $1.25. I wish we could raise the price of all farm products, because the more the farmer receives for his produce the better it is for the country. I have the same feeling toward the wage earners.

I am sure that if the gentlemen on the Republican side would stop their ridiculous faultfinding and refuse to be used by the various interests opposed to the sincere efforts and policies of President Roosevelt they could help to reestablish confidence, and their hopes for 1940 would be far brighter than they are today. The reciprocal-trade agreements and the policies of this administration generally have proven helpful and beneficial. The increase in our exports is but one indication of this. To you Republicans let me say that for your own benefit I hope you will realize that these foolish accusations will gain you nothing. You cannot continue to advocate certain policies at home when seeking election, come down here and vote against them, and then hope to fool the people into sending you back to Congress.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I put the statement in the RECORD that there were three kinds of lies-lies, damn lies, and statistics. Whenever gentlemen from the stockyards district of Chicago rise here and quote statistics, they are subject to marvelous limitations. Any man who says on the floor of this House that he has received thousands of letters in support of the reciprocal-trade agreements must have a very narrow sphere. What in the world do the people of the gentleman's district in Chicago know about dairy farming in Wisconsin, which has been half destroyed already by these reciprocal treaties or agreements? That is merely a subterfuge. I notice in the original bill they had "treaties." You called them "treaties," because most of the gentlemen who propose these do not know the difference between an agreement and a treaty. A treaty is a solemn pledge between two nations, supported by the Senate of the United States and originated always under the Constitution by the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I sat in a meeting this morning with dairy farmers from the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota. I have heard the story of their business, the story of an industry being destroyed. You have destroyed the cotton industry. The next step is to destroy the dairy industry. You destroyed the cotton industry by the strange machinations of a mental perversion and the thought that you could control the cotton market of the world with all the soil there is in other countries on which to raise cotton. Again, you want to suppress the dairy industry by reason of the fact that you can import into this country the products of the dairy industry.

I am going to invite the gentleman from Chicago to have dinner with me some time and I am going to have Polish ham, brought in here in competition with hams made in his district. I am going to have cheese from Finland brought in here in competition with the processed cheese of his country. I am going to have potatoes from Scotland brought in here. I am going to present him with a pair of hose for his wife or some lady friend, possibly lady friend, from Czechoslovakia, Germany, or Japan; and for his Christmas tree I will give him ornaments made in Japan for 27 cents on which the labor cost in Schenectady, N. Y., would be 58 cents.

Oh, yes; your trade treaties have done much for this country. Our exports have fallen away. Our imports are less because we have no standardization for commerce in these United States. You have destroyed the dairy industry. You can buy butter from Denmark or from New Zealand cheaper than you can produce it in Wisconsin or in the upper reaches of New York State. You can produce cheese and bring it over here. There are 10,600,000 pounds of Swiss cheese made in one section of my State. I fed it to the Congressmen sometime ago and they agreed it was better than the imported article. Yet we imported 10,800,000 pounds of that cheese under a reciprocal-trade agreement.

That has a wonderful effect. It is a great help to this Nation, is it not?

Mr. Chairman, I think this item awarding $225,000 should be cut out. I do not think there ought to be a dollar spent for this. Let it stand on its own bottom. You do not need to have any bookkeeping. You do not have to have anything else except propaganda. I would like to have you go with me to a club to which I belong, the National Press Club, and look on the tables and see how many hundreds of people are busy writing pieces to support the policies of this administration, as evidenced by the product—a dying administration, an administration that is fading away into the votes of the people in November next year.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, whether this appropriation is put back into the bill or not, there will still be an appropriation for the present year. I know the Members have had the same difficulty I have had in securing accurate information with reference to exports to foreign countries and our imports from foreign countries. I actually feel sorry for the honest men in the State Department and the Department of Commerce when I ask them questions. They know perfectly well they are expected not to give me the information which they have. I can prove this, but I do not want to get these people into serious trouble. There are men in the departments who do not want the kind of reciprocal-trade agreements we have today, but they are bound to follow the directions of their leaders.

When these agreements were passed, the Congress put a noose around its neck and the necks of the businessmen and around the necks of the workers of this country. That noose is growing tighter and tighter. I deplore the situation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentlewoman

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentlewoman has referred to the Government clerks down here who give out this information. She feels sorry for them. How will the gentlewoman feel when all of this statistical information on exports and imports is turned over to the State Department?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall regret it extremely, and I have made that statement before.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that Congressmen, businessmen, workers, and all taxpayers are enttiled to know what is transpiring under the reciprocal trade agreement program. When I ask for detailed information I am told that it takes too long to get the figures together on exports and imports of the individual commodities under each agreement. However, if the State Department is pursuing this program on a scientific basis, it would be necessary that they have such information at their finger tips. During the early part of the program that Department issued releases showing the results of all agreement items individually and collectively and the nonagreement items individually and as a whole under each agreement. However, I have been unable to secure releases of that nature showing the trade for the past 2 years.

I have in my hand a release which 2 years ago the State Department used in issuing information with regard to these trade agreements. This shows the effect upon this country of the trade agreements. The effects were not too good upon the United States so the State Department no longer issues these releases. If anyone would like to ascertain that himself, he will find it to be true. You cannot secure these releases with this information today. The releases today are cleverly done, but very incomplete.

Also, we all know that certain supposed concessions were made by foreign countries. Those countries are trying to renew their reciprocal-trade agreements. We know certain trade concessions were made by those foreign countries, but I wonder how many people have checked up and tried to find out and have secured information as to whether Belgium, for instance, or any other country under the reciprocal-trade agreements, is actually buying all our commodities that were given concessions. I believe you will find that we are not exporting to foreign countries to any such degree as the State Department would have us believe. Certainly. the Members of Congress are entitled to every bit of information they can get. We are certain Congress will protect the people of our districts. I sincerely hope the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan], and every member of the committee will join with me in going to the Department and insisting that if this money goes back into this appropriation bill, all statistics and information will be given to us. It is all very well to say that the country likes the reciprocal-trade agreements. Perhaps a few industries have prospered under them, but, as a whole, I feel very sure that if you will investigate you will find that many of the workers of our country today are walking the streets on account of the reciprocal-trade agreements. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have just been told about the loss of jobs in America due to the existence of the reciprocal-trade agreements. I want to tell you that the Smoot-Hawley tariff, whereby industry took its capital and the money made from American labor and jumped the walls created by the tariff and established new factories abroad in competition with and to the loss of the American workingman, is the place where the American workingman was sold down the river.

The reciprocal-trade agreements have sought the exchange of goods. The entire world today is suffering from lack of employment. Before goods can be exchanged they must be made, and accordingly that presupposes labor.

The question came up here about the treatment agriculture has received under the reciprocal-trade agreements. In that connection let me turn to the condition of the automobile industry, which has benefited under the reciprocal-trade agreements. The good road on which the farmer goes to market is the result of the activity of the automobile industry. The very way he travels is the result of the activity of the automobile industry.

On an output of 5,000,000 cars there is consumed annually by the automobile industry: Cotton, over 600,000 bales; wool, the yield from 4,000,000 sheep; lumber, the product of over 100,000 acres; leather, the hides from 150,000 head; flax, 5,500,000 bushels; tung oil, 3,625,000 gallons; corn, 2,500,000 bushels; hair, the yield of over 425,000 goats; turpentine,

10,000,000 pounds; sugar, the yield of 60,000 acres; and so I could go on

The ribbons of highway throughout the land and the stopand-go system give silent evidence of automobile advancement. The widening of thoroughfares is the result of the automobile industry. All this has had its indirect effect on the agricultural districts of this Nation. We should stop the practice in this House of petty differences according to the districts from which we come. The laborers in the automobile industry are as much brothers in toil of those working on the farms as any other workmen throughout the Nation.

A survey made by the National Committee for Reciprocal Trade shows that from a total of 356 daily newspapers stepping into the field of comment editorially on this subject that 286 have commented most favorably upon this trade agreement; and these newspapers, as I said previously, are daily papers, which have without reservation endorsed the program, and among them are some with the largest circulations in the country.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RABAUT. I am glad to yield to my friend from New York

Mr. SIROVICH. About 11 years ago I beheld the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means rise in this Hall and state that if the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was passed it would bring prosperity back to our country. Ninety-two percent of all the newspapers of the country and 89 percent of all the editors of the Nation were opposed to it. When the bill was passed it compelled many American interests to go to European countries and industrialize Europe, Asia, and Africa and produce with cheap labor. This plagued America and brought about the panic. The reciprocal-trade agreements are now an attempt to overcome the tragedy of what the Hawley-Smoot tariff gave to our country.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is correct. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the program of certain people of this country in fighting trade treaties is for the benefit of foreign countries. As stated by the speaker who just preceded me, they are causing our capital and our experts in production and industry and our industrial plants to be moved out of the United States to Asia, Europe, to South America, and other lands. I cannot comprehend the attitude of anyone who desires to build up the industries of foreign countries at the expense of Americans. On yesterday the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] stated that he saw at the San Francisco Exposition cans of beef made by the Armour and Swift companies. These companies have moved plants to South America and built plants there and have deprived the laboring men of America of work in that way. We know the Ford Co. has built several plants in foreign countries. We know of a great machinery company of Chicago which moved one of its great plants to Canada. We know that the President Suspender Co. moved to Canada. We are moving these and many other concerns to foreign countries by our tariff laws.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHENS. I yield to the gentleman from California.
Mr. CARTER. Does not the gentleman believe that inasmuch as Swift and Armour and other packing companies have moved to South America and are shipping into this country their packed products we ought to have a sufficient tariff to protect our smaller packers here?

Mr. KITCHENS. I appreciate that they are moving to these foreign countries to get business. Under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act that business was cut off in favor of a few people in this country who obtained a monopoly.

I now want to read from the report of the Department of Commerce supported by the Department of Agriculture.

In 1929, under the Smoot-Hawley Act, or about the time that act went into effect, under the Republican administration, there were imported into this country 407,000 bushels of corn while in 1938 there were only 404,000 bushels imported.

There were imported into this country in 1929, 275 bushels of rye, and in 1938 only 2 bushels.

There were imported in 1929, 30,787 tons of hay, while in 1938 there were imported 18,954 tons,

There were imported in 1929 soybean-oil cakes and oil-cake meal, 17,185,000 pounds, as against 6,591,00 pounds in 1938.

The gentlemen from Wisconsin have been talking about butter. Let us see how much butter was imported into this country in 1929 and 1938—2,773,000 pounds of butter in 1929 and 1,624,000 pounds in 1938. Why not be accurate and not deal in percentages of isolated articles?

Let us see about cheese. There were 7,638,200 pounds of cheese imported in 1929, while in 1938 there were only 5,443,200 pounds of cheese imported. These facts should not be distorted for political advantage.

There were hogs imported in 1929 amounting to 614,000 pounds, while in 1938 there were only 57,000 pounds imported.

There were fresh beef and veal imported in 1929 of 4,288,200 pounds, while in 1938 only 1,737,000 pounds were imported. We have lately and are now hearing a lot about canned beef as though a new thing. In 1929 we imported 7,989,900 pounds of canned beef, while in 1938 we imported 7,859,700 pounds. Yet a great howl is made by Republican Members, although importations of canned beef are less under this administration.

How much was the total of all meat products imported in 1929? Two hundred and three million six hundred and fourteen pounds, while in 1938 only 148,250,000 pounds.

In 1929 we imported 28,037,100 pounds of wool and mohair, while in 1938 we imported only 10,427,400 pounds.

In 1929 we imported 51,565,900 pounds of hides, while in 1938 we imported only 18,195,100 pounds.

In 1929 we imported 22,327,500 pounds of cotton, while in 1938 we imported only 10,638,200 pounds.

In 1929 we imported 4,276,000 pounds of potatoes, while in 1938 we imported only 764,000 pounds.

In 1930, 1931, and 1932 there was really no foreign market for our farm products. So we had 2-cent beef, 4-cent hogs, 10-cent corn, 25-cent wheat, and 5-cent cotton, and everybody broke except a few. Are we going to return to such conditions as existed under the last Republican administration, or are we going to stay with the safe, sound, commonsense program of reciprocal trade with all peoples as promoted by our great Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull? Mr. Speaker, we want no more of Grundyism, Hawley-Smootism, or of the American Tariff League.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ascertain how much more time may be desired on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that contemplate that half of the time will be allocated to the minority?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I am not in a position, as the gentleman knows, to pass on that question. That is a matter for the Chair to determine.

Mr. DITTER. Then I shall have to object.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, when I heard the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] open his remarks here a few moments ago I really thought he was going to make a speech against reciprocal-trade agreements, and when he began to criticize some of the Republican Members for their speeches I came to the conclusion that probably he was for the reciprocal-trade agreements. Now, he has spoken on both sides of the question, and it is rather difficult to determine just what side he is on. Probably I can help him come to a definite conclusion, so he may make up his mind as to how he is going to vote on this matter.

The reciprocal-trade policy was designed principally to aid in the exportation of our cotton surpluses from this country. It was stated that the dairy farmers, beef farmers, pork farmers, and the farmers producing the ordinary food products of the country should be required to stand for some extra competitive imports from foreign countries so that foreigners could build up their exchanges here with which to buy cotton. The program has now been in effect for several years, and let us see how it has acted on cotton.

In the first year of the New Deal the southern cotton farmers exported 8,400,000 bales of cotton, which was the average exportation of cotton for the 10 years prior to that time. The exports of cotton have not been increased by the reciprocal-trade policies, as was intended, and this year the exports will not exceed 3,500,000 bales, as against more than 8,000,000 bales the first year the reciprocal-trade program was in operation. So the cotton farmers are losing their cotton market not only on account of the reciprocal-trade policy, but on account of some of the other unfortunate policies that the administration has made with reference to cotton production.

Why, right at the present time the textile mills which have been so recently located in the South are going out of business. They are closing down. The first 3 months of this year it is noted that the Japanese cotton textiles sent into this country more than 17,000,000 yards of bleached cotton goods as against only 4,500,000 yards during the same period a year ago.

So our cotton farmers are gradually losing their world trade because of the reciprocal-trade program and because of the detrimental policies now in effect in the general farm program.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PACE.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry, but I cannot vield.

Another thing about the cotton farmer. The program in this country has transferred the production of cotton from the United States to foreign countries, and Japan today, instead of producing cotton goods for shipment into the United States from American cotton, is producing and selling goods in this country from cotton which is grown in Brazil and other foreign countries of the world because they can buy it cheaper. I cannot understand how the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Kitchens], or how a man from any other cotton State, can advocate the continuance of the program that is working so detrimentally to his advantage and is losing him the world market. I therefore hope my friend from Arkansas and the real friends of cotton here in the Congress will vote to eliminate this item from the appropriation bill, because our American farmers are entitled to the market of this country.

Mr. Chairman, much has been said today by leading Democrats of this House who favor the continuation of the reciprocal-trade policy which gives our domestic market to foreign producers. These free-traders claim that our farmers are now receiving handsome prices for their farm products and seek to make political capital over the fact that farm prices today are in some instances a few cents higher than they were in 1932. They also cite with satisfaction the falling off of competitive farm imports for the calendar year 1938, but they forget about the flood of farm imports in 1937 which caused a glutted market in this country and brought about falling farm prices.

In order to keep the record straight I quote herewith from a speech which I made in the House on June 14, 1938, showing, first, a comparative table of farm prices under both Republican and Democratic administrations: and, second, a statement with tables of increasing imports under New Deal reciprocal-trade experimentation.

COMPARISON OF AVERAGE PRICES RECEIVED BY FARMERS FOR CERTAIN PRODUCTS BETWEEN 1921-32 (REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION) AND 1933-37 (NEW DEAL OR DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION)

Because of extremely low prices for farm products throughout the entire world in 1932, New Deal leaders, in order to maintain political control, have done their utmost to prejudice the minds of American farmers against the Republican Party which had control of the Federal Government from March 4, 1921, to March 4, 1933, with the exception that the Democrats controlled the House of Representatives in Congress from March 4, 1931, to March 4, 1933.

I personally feel, very strongly, that partisan politics should not enter into important matters relating to the welfare of American farmers or any other group. Everyone admits that conditions and prices were deplorable in 1932, and no one wants to return to that distressing time. Although, with falling farm prices and a 59-cent dollar in purchasing power, conditions do not look very promising today.

But what are the true facts as to comparative prices? The answer is supplied by the Department of Agriculture, which has been dominated by Secretary Wallace for the past 5 years. During the 12 years of Republican administration there was no curtailment of production; average exports of surplus farm products far exceeded exports of similar products under the New Deal; every effort was node to protect the home method for introduct foreign effort was made to protect the home marker from injurious foreign competition; and, last but not least, the average prices received by the farmers for their products during the 12 years under Republican administration (including 1932) were 25 percent higher than anything realized under 5 years of the New Deal. Therefore, let the Department of Agriculture give the facts in the following comparative table of prices: comparative table of prices:

NEW DEAL FREE TRADERS GIVE AMERICAN MARKET TO FOREIGN PRODUCERS

Mr. Speaker, the home market, which rightfully belongs to American farmers, has been given to foreign producers. During the past 5 years (1933-37) when the farmers of the United States have been persuaded to restrict general farm production, so as to produce less, New Dealers at Washington have literally invited foreign farmers to produce more of the same competitive farm commodities for shipment into this country. These cheaply pro-duced foreign farm products were sold in the United States in competition with domestic production.

American farmers took approximately 40,000,000 acres of good farm land out of customary production at the demand of the New Deal. The competitive farm imports for 1937, valued at around $1,000,000,000, displaced nearly 75,000,000 acres of domestic farm land and brought a glutted market with falling prices and distress to American agriculture.

The following table covers a partial list of competitive farm imports for the years 1933 and 1937 from official figures furnished by the United States Department of Commerce:

Products	1933 imports	1937 imports	United States acres dis- placed in 1937

In addition to the loss of the home market and billions of dollars to American farmers, several millions of our unemployed would have had work in this country in the production and preparation of these farm products if our domestic market had received proper protection. Mr. American farmer and laboring man, will you permit this un-American policy to continue?

Note.—Import and export figures above given from reports of U. S. Department of Commerce, Washington. D. C.

A careful study of the above table of imports and exports for the year 1937 should convince the most skeptical individual that the American farmer has been traded off so as to permit manufacturers of war supplies and machinery to sell their products in foreign markets.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The pending motion is being utilized by our Republican friends for a wholesale attack on the reciprocal-trade agreements. No matter how much they may make appeal to those representing cotton-producing States, the whole attack today is political. We on the Democratic side might just as well realize that fact. The reciprocal-trade agreements have received the support of the outstanding Republican leaders of the country. The Republican Members of the House repudiate those leaders, but you and I as Democrats and the country generally know that the program under the leadership of Secretary Hull is doing more to brush aside misunderstanding among the peoples of the nations of the world, more toward universal peace than any policy instituted by any government for many decades. It is being conducted in a practical manner, consistent with the best interest of our country. Here and there, of course, there will be some harmful repercussions, but in considering this program we must look at the entire picture, our whole national economy, and not some particular isolated part of it. Since the passage of the reciprocal trade agreement law our exports have increased tremendously. The figures and facts indisputably support that statement. Our Republican friends are playing politics. Do not let us on the Democratic side deceive ourselves in that respect. My Republican friends from New England will get up and talk about the plight of industry in New England. They give only lip service to the Townsendites, kidding them for their vote, when as a matter of fact they will vote against them when the bill comes up. But in the meantime they will hug them prior to the final vote in the hope that they will get support from them and in the hope that the bill will not come up.

Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, I know that the gentleman from Michigan is not one of them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman when we will get that bill out.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am for bringing it out.

Mr. HOFFMAN. So am I.

Mr. McCORMACK. My Republican friends from New England talk about the flight of industry to the South. That took place, as a matter of fact, during the years from 1922 to 1929, during a Republican administration in Washington and during a Republican administration in Massachusetts. Massachusetts was the only industrial State in the Union to lose business in the great days of prosperity when the Republicans were loaning money to European nations with which to buy American goods, thus creating artificial prosperity. Massachusetts is the only industrial State in the Union that lost business and industry, all of which occurred under Republican rule, both National and State, and yet today in Massachusetts and in New England they endeavor to create the impression that the Democrats are responsible for that condition. It is the same way with the reciprocal-trade agreements. They are sniping. This is an appropriation of $225,000, and they are trying to sabotage the effect of the operation of the law, a Democratic measure, which many Republicans supported by their votes, but on which they are trying to play both ends against the middle by speaking against it now. I do not blame them because they are playing politics, but let you and I on the Democratic side realize what they are doing and realize that if this amendment is defeated it will go forth to the country as an attack on the reciprocal-trade policy of our administration, as an attack on the great leadership of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, we may be playing politics, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] said, but, for one, I deny that. But if we admit, for the sake of the argument, that we are playing politics, I call the attention of the gentlemen on the majority side to the fact that we are doing it with our own money. Men furthering the interest of the administration, the New Deal, are collecting money from the workers of the country to play politics with. Last year the United Mine Workers of America gave $470,000 to the New Deal campaign fund, and other labor organizations contributed enough more to make a total of $1,700,000. That is a fair-sized contribution, wherever they got it.

Where did they get it? They got it out of the pockets of the workers. They have no other source of revenue. They are using the National Labor Relations Act and the National Labor Relations Board to force all the workers into the C. I. O. or the United Mine Workers' organization, contrary to the spirit and purpose of the law. Why are they doing that? They are doing that so that John L. Lewis can collect the membership fees and the dues from the men who want to work, who have to work for a living. After John collects it, then he will turn around and give a part of it to the Democratic campaign fund. Now, that is one way to get campaign money.

With that thought in mind, realizing that fact, we can understand why it is that the force of the administration is today thrown behind John Lewis when he goes down into Kentucky and says that no man down there can work in a coal mine until he joins the United Mine Workers because. after the United Mine Workers get the money-and they had something like $3,000,000 in 1936-they will turn around and support the C. I. O., back financially the C. I. O., which tried to crowd all the automobile workers into that organization, and then they will collect from all those hundreds of thousands of workers a membership fee, and then they will contribute part of what they collect to the great Democratic organization. The administration and the N. L. R. B. will help Lewis to force the workers into his organization. Then Lewis will squeeze them, force dues and fees out of them, and give part of the money so collected to New Deal politicians. A sweet racket.

Now, that is one way to get campaign money. Dr. Townsend passes the hat to get his money. That is the way he gets it, through a voluntary contribution; but the C. I. O. and Lewis use the Labor Board and the power of the administration and the power of the Department of Justice to, by intimidation and coercion, force it out of the worker. The Department of Justice, according to the press, is saying to those operators down there, "You fellows sign up and you compel your miners to go into our organization, or we will prosecute you again for violating the criminal law. We will give you 6 or 8 weeks more of this prosecution under the Federal law."

If the operators are to be prosecuted, they should be prosecuted because they have violated the law, not because they refuse to compel their employees to join Lewis' organization. Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Would you not as soon receive a little money and pay it back to the C. I. O. as to receive it through the American Tariff League, controlled by such men as Grundy and fellows like that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know Grundy. Most of the grafters today, most of the racketeer revenue collectors today, are in the C. I. O., or with the New Deal administration, the outfit that uses or permits the use of relief funds for political

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] certainly put this thing exactly where it belongs. as a political issue. I am glad he brought it out, making it unnecessary for me to do so.

If the reciprocal-trade agreements, if the entire policy of the "friendly neighbor" was sound, why do we have 12,000,000 unemployed American workers? Why do we have American agriculture prostrate and on its back because of low prices? Why is our cotton industry destroyed? Why is milk, butter, and cheese from Wisconsin selling at prices less than onehalf their cost of production? You say the reciprocal-trade agreements are not operating as a detriment to the great dairy industry in this country, and in doing so you point, as did the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] to the small imports in 1939 of farm produce as compared with 1938. Of course, they are not importing anything to this country today. They cannot import to this country because our prices are so far below their prices that it is not profitable. There is another thing you do not realize in this reciprocal trade agreement business, particularly in its relationship to Canada, and that is that the imports have little to do with the matter, but it is the world price level, the Canadian price level, that is hanging over the American market that makes it utterly impossible for our prices to seep up through that level. We cannot get up there. The minute we do, then you watch the imports come in. What happens to the price structure then? It immediately goes right down.

Putting this $225,000 on a political basis means just one thing to me. It means that the $225,000 will go back into the bill. Why will it go back into the bill? Because the tremendous majority on the democratic side of the aisle will put it back, but I, for one, cannot vote $225,000 or $2.25 to support a program which, in my honest opinion and from all the facts I can gather and analyze as honestly as I possibly can, is driving the farmers in my State, is driving the farmers all through the Nation, into bankruptcy; is destroying industry in this country; is adding to and building the big monopolies that we have in this country. Why are Bordens, National Dairies, Kraft-Phenix, and all the rest of them. growing every year under your New Deal administration? Why are they waxing fat, while the Wisconsin farmers and others are not getting anywhere near cost of production and every small industry in the country is going out of business? You talk about kicking the money-changers out. Go after these monopolies! [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks] has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have addressed this House, and I sincerely regret that I have to take the floor in opposition to a measure that is sponsored by my good friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] whom I love sincerely; but the people of my district, the interests of my district are being destroyed by this reciprocal trade agreement policy that this item if inserted in this bill will tend to foster. What are those industries?

I represent a district that is largely agricultural. We raise practically everything in the eighteenth district of Ohio that can be raised in our section of the country. We have dairy farms. Our dairy farmers are selling their milk cheaper than it costs them to produce it. Where do they sell it? They sell it in the Pittsburgh market. Pittsburgh is the central market for all that section.

Yesterday a delegation of men representing the milk industry of Ohio met me out here in the Hall and told me what is happening to their industry. The dairy farmers are going into bankruptcy, and they are forced into bankruptcy by the price of milk fixed at Pittsburgh. This price has been fixed, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said, by importations of foreign milk from Canada. This is not a guess. They have traced the milk, they told me yesterday, and found that it is coming from Canada. The surplus supply that is beating down the price of milk in the Pittsburgh area comes from Canada. What else is happening?

We have turned over the making of glassware by hand to the Japanese under this policy. Oh, you say, we have no reciprocal-trade agreement with Japan, and this is true; but, Mr. Chairman, Japan is the chief beneficiary under this reciprocal trade agreement policy, because under the mostfavored-nation clause they benefit by every one of the 19 trade agreements made with other countries. Come with me down into my district and I will show you the smokeless stacks of glass mills in Bellaire, and men out of work, tramping the streets with nowhere to go for a job because you have under this policy turned the glass markets of America over to the producers of Japan. [Applause.]

Then there is the pottery industry. In 1937 more than 10,000,000 dozen pieces of potteryware came into this country from Japan alone, and as a result the potteries of my district are working part time, if they are working at all. My district contains the greatest pottery center in the United States, the city of East Liverpool, Ohio, where it is practically the sole industry, and as a result of this policy of trading our markets to the producers of pottery in foreign lands the American markets have been largely taken over by the Japanese products.

I also have in my district a great coal-mining industry. My district produces more coal than any other congressional district in the State of Ohio, and yet in 1937 a quota agreement was entered into between the United States and Russia, whereby 400,000 tons of Russian coal was to be admitted to American markets free of all taxes, while at the same time our coal miners were out of work. Does this make sense? Is it a sound policy that gives the markets for American coal to the coal miners of Russia instead of to the coal miners of the United States?

My district also is a great steel-producing district, and under present conditions steel from Belgium and the steelproducing centers of Europe is sold in the United States, at all points within 200 miles of the seacoast, cheaper than American steel can be produced in my district and sold in that same area. Does this make sense? Is it sound policy to trade off the markets of the products of tens of thousands of people, who derive their living from the production of steel, to the steel-producing centers of Europe? I insist that such a policy, if continued and persisted in, will deepen the depression rather than tend to lift us out of it. How can we expect a recovery of business in all of these industries that I have named if we insist on turning over our legitimate markets in this country to the products of similar industries in foreign lands. We are selling the American people. by this policy, "down the river," and under protestations of humanitaria i ideals we are deepening and prolonging the depression.

The CHIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. Dworshak] is recognized.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCor-MACK), recognized as the spokesman of the administration, tell us that the Republicans are playing politics with the issue which is confronting us at this time. The country for more than 6 years has been surfeited and deluged with politics, not by the Republicans but by the administration, which has had complete control of the legislative and executive branches of our Federal Government.

We have been told how beneficial these reciprocal-trade agreements and other New Deal policies are, insofar as the welfare and security of American industry and agriculture are concerned. Let me refer you to a letter addressed a few days ago by the President of the United States to the chairman of the Monopoly Committee. Possibly we must believe what the Democrats say, that all of these policies have been cutstanding successes, but in this letter to Senator O'MA-HONEY the President states that a large part of our vast reservoir of money and savings has remained idle in stagnant pools, and he wants to know the solution that will get this money to flowing into the field of investment in productive enterprise. I have not time to read further, but apparently the President has come to realize that despite planned economy and an attempt to regulate and control the production of agriculture in our country, today we have ruincusly low prices and the farmers no longer believe that it is possible to enjoy prosperity under the New Deal plannedeconomy program.

It was first sought to remove the exportable surpluses of agricultural crops and to establish parity prices for our farmers, yet through these reciprocal-trade agreements we find that our domestic markets have been surrendered to the farmers and the laborers of foreign countries.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DWORSHAK. Briefly.

Mr. KNUTSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the only prosperous manufacturers in the country today are the manufacturers of red ink.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The gentleman is quite correct. We hear a great deal about our exports. May I direct attention to the imports of agricultural products? We find foreign countries sending to the United States livestock, wool products, dairy products, sugar, potatoes, and almost every conceivable agricultural commodity.

There is little justification to surrender our domestic markets and restrict production here. American producers do not want regimentation and subsidies—all they want is an opportunity to supply the American market. They want an opportunity to farm 50,000,000 acres of land which would be required to produce the commodities which have been imported under reciprocal-trade agreements. They want their purchasing power restored and thus stimulate business and accentuate activity in our factories. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, not a Member of this Congress can deny that the United States of America is the highest cost-production country in the world, and our cost of production is being increased all the time. Under the trade agreements the barriers to imports are being lowered all the time, and these lowered duties are on goods and agricultural products that come from nations where the people live upon a bare subsistence level. Our labor and our farmers cannot defeat a program of that kind. I challenge any man to stand up and on his honor say that we can. It just cannot be done. Every thoughtful man in this country knows the truth whereof I speak. We talk about exports.

Here is a circular from the National Foreign Trade Week. The Government is sending out salaried men into every corner of the United States at the taxpayers' expense trying to stimulate exports, yet exports are decreasing. What is the history? These figures I am presenting on our imports and exports are taken from the United States Department of Commerce. I shall read the table and then put them in my remarks. [Applause.]

This is only a partial list of imports and exports, but later when the list is fully tabulated, I shall cover the whole field.

Mr. Chairman, the 11,000,000 idle working men and women, made idle by imports, and these hundreds of thousands of farmers who are losing their farms under foreclosure, know full well the tragedy these figures disclose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Cummings].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I do not take much part in this bushwah and chewing the rag about farm prices. I am a farmer and have been a farmer all my life. Outside of the little time spent here, every dollar I have made has come from the farm and stock business. It makes me rather tired to hear these gentlemen who represent the farmers come in here and howl about prices. Why do they not talk about what prices were when we took over—and when I say "we," I mean the Democrats. I am not saying that the prices are today what they should be, but let us go back to 1932, when hogs were selling for 2 cents; cattle, 4 cents; and wheat, 25 cents. In the fall of 1932 I know a man who bought 24 carloads of wheat for 22 cents. You gentlemen from Iowa can remember when your corn was selling for 8 cents, if you could find a buyer.

What is the use of howling about that and telling things that are not true? Of course, it is not as good as it ought to be. You know that with the labor-saving machinery we have, and with the vast multitude of people in this country, all of them can never be put back to work again. You know that there is not another possibility for another New York, Chicago, or Omaha. You know there is not a chance for all this surplus labor.

Why lay it all onto the farmer? We hear a lot about Canadian cattle. Last week I noticed in the paper the reports from Chicago. I was watching them because I had a few cattle to sell. There were 12,000 cattle on the Chicago market. There were 2 cars of Canadian cattle. What does the Canadian treaty amount to? It does not amount to one-half of 1 percent.

I have a town in my district, Greeley, Colo., with 13,000 people. For all the people of Greeley, barring all of the Canadian cattle, it would not make a difference of 25 cents in the meat bill. If all the milk cows that could come in, 25,000, at $1 reduction in tariff were barred, what would the reduction be? It would not amount to as much as it would if one farmer milked one more cow in the city of Greeley.

Why not tell the truth? We know times are hard. We know business is bad. You know that in the fall of 1932 you could not borrow a dollar on any farm in the United States; but today you can borrow all you want at 31/2 percent. You know what the farm debt was at that time. The farm debt of the United States has decreased by hundreds of millions in the last few years. Why not tell the truth? Do not exaggerate for political purposes. God knows the truth is bad enough, but let us be decent with one another. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER].

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in protest against the reciprocal-trade policy for a New England industry which, unlike some others mentioned today by the free-traders, has never been able, nor has it ever desired, to set up factories in foreign countries, but has gallantly in these New Deal days fought to keep its head above water. I refer to the woolen and worsted industry of New England. We have had a lot of figures pro and con on reciprocal-trade agreements. Permit me to quote some figures provided by Col. William B. Brown, of the Continental Mills, Inc., of Philadelphia.

During the first quarter of 1929 under the terms of British trade agreement, we imported 1,275,241 square yards of worsteds as against 477,324 square yards for the corresponding period of 1938. The imports of woolens for the same period was 2,381,875, as compared with 1,544,984 for 1938.

Roughly, this means that over 6,000 American textile workers could have been employed for 3 months at the prevailing wage rates, but they were deprived of the opportunity to manufacture this amount of goods, which slid into America on the reciprocity skids. I may say that in Rhode Island our rates for textile workers are the highest in the country, therefore the highest in the world. In other words, the reciprocal-trade agreements are putting Americans out of work-the woolen workers, the worsted workers, the lace workers-all have lost millions in wages on account of these trade agreements.

These industries are prominent in Rhode Island, that great industrial State from which the Government has wrung in taxes, from 1933 to 1938, the sum of $128,233,759 and received back in farm subsidy payments during the same time the mere pittance of $74,860. That is the part of the New Deal record of Rhode Island.

There is nothing political, therefore, in the protest of Rhode Island against so many industry-wrecking phases of the New Deal. If our case is a legitimate economic argument, we in Rhode Island are being bled white. The facts and figures prove it. Let me assure you that these facts and figures had a great deal to do with the vote of protest in that State last

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Griswold].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I can very readily see why the gentleman from Arkansas in his defense of the treaties wants to defend the administration. I notice the comparison of total farm value in his State with total subsidies and taxes paid with the State of Wisconsin. I can very readily see why Arkansas got twice as much in subsidy payments as it paid in taxes to the Federal Government.

My State got one-ninth as much in subsidy as it paid in Federal taxes. Arkansas got 20 percent of the farm value of the State in agricultural subsidies. Wisconsin got less than 1 percent of the value of its farms in agricultural subsidies.

We talk here about figures that do not mean anything. Last year we imported into this country 428,000 head of cattle. We talk about the exports, but we only exported 3,000 head. During the first 2 months of this year we imported 183,000 head. If we keep up our importations at that rate, we will bring into this country over a million head, which is one-third of all the cattle in my State, and probably more than all of the cattle in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado. Mr. CUMMINGS. In the first place, I am not from Arkansas. I am from Colorado. This reduction in tariff does not increase the number of cattle that can come in one head.

It does lower the tariff $1 per hundred. It makes it $2 per hundred instead of $3 per hundred. On the amount of cattle imported it equals one-half of 1 percent of the total slaughter in the United States. Now, confine yourself to figures and facts. [Laughter and applause.] And it all came in under a Republican tariff.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Let me say this to the gentleman. In the first place, the gentleman does not know what the treaty does, because it cuts the duty down to 11/2 cents per pound.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does not; it cuts it to 2. It reduces it from 3 to 2.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There is absolutely no limit on dairy cows; no restriction whatsoever.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There is. There is a limit of 25,000 head. Mr. GRISWOLD. No. Not under the present treaty.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It reduces the tariff $1 per hundred on 25,000 head. They may bring in as many as they want up to 25,000.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am talking about the treaty of January 1, 1939.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Colorado knows very little about the dairy or cattle industry. The gentleman hails from Colorado. I receive hundreds of letters per week from sugar producers in Colorado raising the "old Harry" about the reciprocal-trade agreements and the New Deal sugar policies which have taken the market away from the sugar producers of the gentleman's State and given it to the Cuban sugar monopoly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I believe the gentleman is one who helped pass the sugar bill, too.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Absolutely not. I support and vote for legislation in the interest of American sugar producers and not the Cuban sugar monopoly.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The President let in 48,000 pounds of canned beef. That is a drop in the bucket. Seventy-eight million pounds of canned beef was shipped into this country last year. What is 48,000 pounds? We ship in 78,000,-000 pounds and shipped out only 1,500,000 pounds. In the first 2 months of this year we shipped in 7,400,000 pounds of canned beef.

Talk about hides, we shipped in 181,000,000 pounds of hides and shipped out 44,000,000 pounds; during the first 2 months of this year we shipped in 8,549,000 pounds. We imported last year 54,431,000 pounds of cheese and exported 1,840,000 pounds; during the first 2 months of this year we have imported 8,339,000.

We imported last year 100,000,000 pounds of barley malt; exported 135,000 pounds, and during the first 2 months of this year have imported 12,482,000 pounds. We imported last year 95,000,000 furs, exported 11,000,000 furs, and during the first 2 months of this year have imported 16,909,644 furs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I have had many friends. on both sides of the aisle talk on this subject this morning, and I wish it were possible to get them calmed down a little to discuss the facts. The worthy gentleman from Massachusetts said this is purely a political question. I wish to say that I attended meetings of farmers and businessmen about these trade treaties before they were ever entered into. We protested to our United States Senator and Congressmen against that. We relieved one United States Senator from the opportunity of coming back again because he did not follow our wishes. I hope the other one has the same results.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. No, I am not in a yielding mood. I am sorry, but I never yield in the few times I get up here to speak. I do not want to get mixed up.

Let us talk about the facts. My good friend from Colorado—and I am on the committee with him—made a very impassioned plea there. I am sorry that he does not see it the way that I see it. My very best friend in the world is in this particular department. If there is anyone in the world I do not want to harm it is he. He is one of the agricultural commissioners in South America at the present time. He was up here this summer and spent hours with me. So as far as I am concerned personally it is not political.

I just want to show you what the trade-agreement program did to the cheese industry in the State of Wisconsin. I inquired before I came down here and I got the figures. I did not have any trouble getting the figures, although some of the Members seem to have difficulty. I would like to show you this chart, and no one can make me believe these are not the facts.

In 1935 we had the same treaty we had before, the same tariffs. You notice in 1935, all during that time, the price of cheese went up during the winter and went down during the spring. In 1936, when all this talk about renewing the Canadian treaty was going on, what happened to the price of cheese? It went from 17 cents a pound to 12½ cents a pound. The farmers of Wisconsin lost more money on cheese that year than they ever got out of the United States Treasury through subsidies.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I have just explained that I am not a very yielding sort of an individual. I will yield if I get time at the end of my remarks.

In 1937 the price of cheese was uniform. The same tariff applied. That shows you the effect of these trade treaties which many times has nothing to do with the supply and demand, because you notice that in 1936 we had more cheese in storage on January 1 that we had on July 1, a reduction, as you can see, from ninety-some million pounds down to eighty-some million pounds.

I do not like to bring in the political part of this discussion but I see our good friends like to bring it in. This is a chart that shows you the national farm income throughout the years. As far as I am concerned, I cannot see anything for agriculture to feel very good about, which ever party may wish to defend it. When pretty nearly 30 percent of our people cannot get 10 percent of our national income I do not know any reason why either party should have any pleasure in looking at the figures. I might ask you there to check up and take the last 5 years of the Republican administration, as bad as it was as far as agriculture is concerned, and compare it with the 5 years of the present administration, which are as you will note:

1928	$8, 756, 000, 000

1931	4, 476, 000, 000

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I would not take the time to talk to you gentlemen of the House this afternoon if I had not heard my distinguished farmer friend from Chicago tell us about products being two and three times higher than they were during the Republican administration.

I happen to own and operate some stock farms, and I have kept a record of the prices I have received for butterfats.

I am not going to talk about reciprocal treaties; I am going to talk to you about free trade, because that is all this is—free trade. We have no treaties with anybody about tariff or anything like it; this is just free trade. [Applause.]

Now, I am going to go back to 1924, and I want you to follow closely on these figures, because they are interesting and they are accurate; and if there is anybody here who questions them, I can show them the actual figures, because I have kept them throughout all these years.

In 1924 the price of butterfat for cheese was 44.8 cents, in 1925 it was 53.6 cents, in 1926 it was 51 cents, in 1927 it was 58.5 cents, in 1928 it was 57.7 cents, in 1929 it was 52 cents, in 1930 it was 41.5 cents, in 1931 it was 31.9 cents, in 1932 it was 24.8 cents, in 1933 it was 26 cents, in 1934 it was 30.2 cents, in 1935 it was 37.7 cents, in 1936 it was 41.4 cents, and in 1938 it was 33.5 cents. Month of April 1939, 28.5 cents.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to address the Committee on the subject before the House at this time; however, I rise in support of the McMillan amendment, which, I understand, proposes to restore the small appropriation for the enforcement of the reciprocal trade agreement law which was passed by a Democratic Congress.

It is unfortunate that a discussion of matters of this sort should assume a partisan aspect and that it cannot be discussed free from any partisanship. However, the main part of the discussion has been with reference to the political record of the two great parties. In 5 minutes you would not expect me, of course, to compare the records of the two parties. However, Mr. Chairman, if there is any one policy of any administration in this country for the last decade, or perhaps longer, that has received from fair-minded people more commendation and less condemnation and less criticism, it has been the policy of the present administration with respect to its tariff policy.

When this administration came into power the Smoot-Hawley law was on the statute books and the effect of its operation had been felt by the entire country. The farm income was almost at the lowest level in our history. It is at least 50 percent greater today than it was in the last year of the previous administration. Farmers were losing their homes by the million, not by the thousand. The farming industry was paralyzed and industry was prostrate. Banks were closing by the thousand and there was greater distress and suffering than ever previously known.

These are conditions we inherited from the Republican administration under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. You cannot laugh that off because it is a fact known to all. The people were warned by more than 1,000 of the leading economists of this country when that act was being considered by the Congress of the ill effects that would follow.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; I cannot yield. The gentleman occupies a great deal more time of the House than I do.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I just want to say that the record in regard to the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill indicates that you southern Democrats—

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is violating the rules of the House. He seems to think that the rules of the House do not apply to him. Why does not the gentleman address the Chair and get permission to interrupt a Member? He has been here long enough to know the rules of the House.

The Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act was the last Republican tariff law and everybody knows what followed that act. The country under it was headed for disaster at a velocity that bewildered the mind, sickened the heart, and staggered the imagination. We were on the verge of a revolution. Now you hear talk about spending too much money. Well, it is cheaper to spend money than it is to have a revolution, and we could not have continued as we were going without one. No administration in all the history of this country ever inherited such a situation or ever found the country in such an economic condition or had the difficult economic problems to solve that this administration has had to deal with.

If you contrast the condition of the farmer, of industry, of banks, the economic condition in every way, during the last years of the previous administration, with present economic conditions, you will find that the picture is one so favorable to the present administration and so unfavorable to the former administration that certainly no Republican can boast, but on the contrary should be ashamed. Gentlemen talk about conditions now, but they do not say a word about the conditions that existed in this country at the time and previous to the time the present administration came into power. This amendment should be adopted and the fine work of Secretary Hull should proceed. His is a record of which we should all be proud regardless of party. [Applause]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to a few figures on agriculture from the Department of Commerce which are authentic. First, value of automobile products exported: Total to all countries in 1934, $191,268,000; in 1935, $228,717,000; in 1937, $398,893,000; in 1938, $272,306,000. Now let us review the exports to the 17 countries and colonies with which trade agreements were in effect: In 1934, $71,820,000; in 1935, $83,593,000; in 1937, $141,882,000; and in 1938, $106,513,000.

Percentage of totals to all countries which went to the 17 trade-agreement countries: In 1934, 37.5 percent; in 1935, 36.5 percent; in 1937, 40.7 percent; in 1938, 39.2 percent.

The average increase in exports of automotive products: In 1937 and 1938, as compared with 1934 and 1935, to all countries, 45 percent; to the 17 trade-agreement countries,

Mr. Chairman, those figures tell their own tale.

The value of foreign trade of the United States in agricultural products: For the calendar year 1929, imports of agricultural products, $2,218,000,000; in 1938, $955,637,000. Therefore, there is a reduction in imports of about $1,250,-000,000. Exports in 1929 of agricultural products, $1,693,-000,000; and in 1938, $827,629,000. The difference of approximately $750,000,000 leaves a balance on our side, roughly, of $500,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the preceding speaker has quoted from a Government report and stated it is an accurate source of information, I shall quote from a Government report issued on the 10th of this month in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Cum-MINGS] as to why we do not go back into the history of the farming business in order to make our comparisons. I am going to talk about eggs and poultry in this connection; and while eggs and poultry may seem to some of you a rather inconsequential matter, something of not very great importance in farm statistics, yet the figures reveal that they rate among the five major divisions of the farming industry in this country. Out in South Dakota we find eggs and poultry to be one of the steady sources of income for our farmers. I take my figures now from the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, report of May 10, this year, which quotes the price, referring to the price of eggs in January 1939 as 18.8 cents per dozen, on the average, and the average price is what we must take. The average price per dozen, 1928 to 1937, during 5 Republican years added to 5 New Deal years, was 25.9 cents per dozen, or definitely a decreased price for eggs received under the New Deal administration, going down until January of this year, when we find them 18.8 cents per dozen.

In February 1939 the New Deal farmer was receiving 16.7 cents per dozen for eggs, whereas during the 10-year average—and we must consider prices in averages, which includes both 5 Republican and 5 New Deal years—the price was 21.6 cents per dozen. In March of this year we find the price 16 cents per dozen, while the average price during the 10 years was 18 cents.

Now for the report of the import of farm products. Let me give them to you in just one aspect in the few minutes allotted to me, and that is from the standpoint of live poultry. In January 1938, under the New Deal reciprocal-trade treaties-which I hope today we can eliminate from the standpoint of appropriating money for them in order to commit agricultural suicide for ourselves—we imported $45.539 worth of live poultry into America, or more than we imported in all of the other Januarys of the present decade added together.

So the American farmer continues to be discriminated against; foreign farmers get his market; the prices for farm products toboggan, while the prices of what the farmer buys go up and up. It is by such duplicity that the New Deal deceives the farmers with hand-outs and handbills, while it loads him down with mortgages, confuses him with regulations and restrictions, while giving his market to low-production-cost competitors in foreign lands.

After completing the reading of this bill, we Republicans are going to insist upon a roll call in the matter of these reciprocal-trade agreements which will give the farmers an opportunity to see just which of the Members of this House are more interested in promoting New Deal policies than they are of promoting New World prosperity for the American farmer. It will be an open vote in a public roll call, after which every farmer can determine for himself whether the import program of the New Deal or the "Buy American" philosophy of the Republican Party, as indicated by this vote, is the most logical one in the all-important business of giving a fair price for a full crop to the farmers of America.

On Monday I introduced in Congress H. R. 6329, known as the Buy American Farm Products in America Act, which would make it unlawful for Government agencies to buy competitive foreign farm products. I hope you will support this act and that you will also vote down this new money for the trade pacts. In conclusion, I want to insert here an editorial entitled "Argetine Bully Beef" from the Sioux City Tribune, which is one of the most carefully edited and most thoughtfully read daily papers in Midwest America.

[From the Sioux City Tribune] ARGENTINE BULLY BEEF

In authorizing the Navy to purchase Argentine canned beef, President Roosevelt not only stirred up a hornet's nest but focused national attention upon the unsound principles of economy that have sabotaged his entire recovery program. In this, as in many other matters, the President has had unsound economic advice.

The President defends his position by calling attention to the saving on Argentine beef at 9 cents per pound over American beef at 23 cents per pound. Granted, but if that is the sole reason for buying competitive products abroad, why not import all of our pork, butter, beef, eggs, fats, oils, etc., and put all our farmers on relief? And then start buying steel for the battleship and uniforms for the troopers.

The President said that the Argentine beef is better in quality.

The President said that the Argentine beef is better in quality, at he didn't know why that was true. We can supply the answer but he didn't know why that was true. We can supply the answer that he couldn't give. The price of all cuts of meat in Argentina is so low that the Argentinians can make more by packing it in steaks, roasts, and all, than they can selling the fresh product.

Granting that Argentine bully beef costs less and is of superior quality, let's look at the economics of the thing, let's make certain that we really got a bargain on that 9-cent beef. In any event Swift or Armour get the profit, whether here or in Argentina. A good fat Argentine range steer, weight 800 pounds, will dress out about 52 percent, or 416 pounds which, when deboned, will yield about 250 pounds available for tinning. At 9 cents per pound this 250 pounds of tinned beef is worth $22.50 which is about what the Argentine farmer receives for the animal; the hide and byproducts just about cover the cost of processing. In order to compete with the Argentine steer, then, a Nebraska or Iowa beef critter would be worth about $2.75 per hundred on the American market.

Let us suppose, on the other hand, that the Navy had purchased corned beef made from a Nebraska steer, using 250 pounds of steaks, roasts, chuck, etc., for which the farmer had been paid $9 per hundred, or $72. On that basis Uncle Sam would have paid 28.8 cents per pound for the corned beef, granting that the hide and byproducts would have paid for the processing, as we have figured in the case of the Argentine steer.

In that case the Nebraska farmer would have drawn $72 in cash out of our national capital and credit pool which he would have turned loose for goods and services. We know from experience and mathematical reckoning that within the course of a year the Nebraska farmer's $72 would have turned over seven times, yielding Let us suppose, on the other hand, that the Navy had purchased Nebraska farmer's $72 would have turned over seven times, yielding $72 of American factory pay rolls and $514 of collective income. That 1-1-7 ratio of turn-over is infallible, as has been successfully proven by the Raw Material National Council's research.

Now, let's see which beef is cheapest. In the case of the Argentine beef we have incurred an international obligation in the tine beef we have incurred an international obligation in the amount of $22.50, which must be paid with gold or goods or for which we must tax ourselves. In the case of the domestic beef, society at large would have $442 left after paying the farmer $72 for his critter, of which $72 would have gone to swell factory pay rolls, and the balance would have been divided among the truckers, railroads, wholesalers, retailers, "white collar" workers, and the American tax collector. And we wouldn't be taxing ourselves to pay the Nebraska farmer $40 for keeping out of production the 4 acres that would have been required to raise and fatten the 800-pound $72 steer.

Actually, then, when we count the tax for the start of t

Actually, then, when we count the tax for subsidizing nonproduction, we have actually paid about $62.50 for the Argentine steer and we have none of the benefits that otherwise would have and we have none of the benefits that otherwise would have accrued to labor, transportation, and merchandising agencies from having utilized a Nebraska beef.

Wise old Abraham Lincoln, discussing the tariff problem, once said: "If we trade with ourselves we have both the goods and the money, but if we trade with the other fellow we have the goods and he has the money."

Enough a statement of the benefits that otherwise would have a statement of the statement of

he has the money."

Knowing simple arithmetic as he did, "Honest Abe" would have purchased American beef at an American price and kept the money at home to revolve through the channels of domestic labor and business enterprise. President Roosevelt has allowed himself to be duped by the honeyed words of internationalists whose policies contribute to mass impoverishment of the American people through disemployment of our own labor, land, and capital.

President Roosevelt should get rid of the phony economists who tell him that cheapness is paramount. Businessmen who scorn tell him that cheapness is paramount. Businessmen who scorn patronage of home enterprise as "isolation" should wake up to the fact that the big-hearted policies of internationalism which they preach will tax the pants off them if carried far enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There are 14 minutes remaining. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case] is recognized.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] put his finger upon the issue that is involved. But he proved too much. He quoted figures to show how we had improved the buying power of the countries with which these trade treaties have been made, and by the very token of those figures, proved exactly that we have been exporting jobs and have been exporting prosperity and have been exporting buying power. [Applause.]

The gentleman did show right well how trade-treaty countries have the exchange to buy more cars but he neglected to give you the figures on the drop in the sale of cars to American farmers. Give good markets to the farmers I know and you will sell more cars in 6 months than you will sell abroad in 6 years! The thing that this country needs today is the development of some buying power and prosperity in the United States.

The wording of this item as it was proposed by the committee and as it was first reproposed in the amendment by the chairman of the committee, proposed to make appropriations for personnel for carrying on reciprocal-trade "treaties"; not trade agreements, but treaties. That was a tacit confession of the true nature of these trade agreements and of the philosophy that underlies this program. Everybody knows that these are treaties, although they seek to get around the constitutional provision that treaties shall be approved by the Senate, and have used the words "trade agreements," and that phrase was used in the Trade Agreements Act.

The subterfuge indicates that the philosophy back of this is to attempt in some way to bring the trade of the country under the control of the State Department, to make trade a matter of policy or politics and not of business. It is a matter that was brought to your attention by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the other day in commenting upon the transfer of the Bureau of Foreign Commerce to the State Department.

Our friends attempt to justify this program on the ground of promoting peace; they overlook the sound advice of George Washington who told us that the great rule in extending our trade was, "To have with it as little political connection as possible." They forget that trade built on favors is a snare and a delusion. It leads to loans based on anything but sound policy. It is an attempt to buy friendships and the results are the same as when private loans are made on that basis. Unsound loans lead to entanglements and good money is thrown after bad. Eventually such a policy leads a nation into wars in which they have no natural concern. That is not the road to peace.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] said that the Republicans were trying to play politics with this issue today. If that be true, the reason for it is that there exists a sound basis for appealing to a majority of the people in this country today for a different kind of policy. [Applause.]

The gentleman also said we were trying to play both ends against the middle. The real playing of both ends against the middle today is the attempt to establish a high standard of living in this country and then to force those who support high standards into competition with low standards abroad. [Applause.] It is that playing of two ends against the middle that is grinding the middle class of this country into poverty today. What we need is not this philosophy of exporting jobs or buying power or prosperity. We need a philosophy of confidence in America by developing prosperity and buying power in America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Dakota has expired.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recog-

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, those who live in the automobile manufacturing sections, I think, are all familiar with the fact that the automobile companies, particularly the export divisions of those companies, want the reciprocal trade agreement program continued. In recent weeks I have thoroughly satisfied myself in that respect, starting with the speeches that were made on the Farm Hour by officers of the exporting divisions of the companies.

A situation developed in Great Britain the other day wherein, I am informed, through the establishment of a new scheme of local taxation, it may deprive our automobile exporters of many of the benefits that the reciprocal-trade agreements were supposed to have given to them. So we can make reciprocal-trade agreements, but we do not have the power to guarantee that the benefits will flow to our automobile manufacturers. For instance, Great Britain imposes an increased local tax on the horsepower of motor-driven vehicles. The tax becomes so burdensome on the local people that they cannot afford to purchase and operate the automobiles. Therefore we lose the anticipated market.

At the present time I have a discussion running with the automobile companies in the form of correspondence on this very problem, which I hope to present to the House at some future time.

There has developed this problem which dovetails directly into what the automobile companies expect to obtain through the operation of the reciprocal trade agreement program, and they may find that through the imposition of local taxes by countries with which we make agreements, their benefits set forth in the agreements will be entirely washed out.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to make one or two comments relative to the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT]. Indeed, we did import a lot of goods into this country in 1929. When our income is running around eighty or ninety billion dollars annually as then, keep in mind that we will import tens of millions of dollars of goods designated as agricultural products. Certainly you will import rubber. Certainly you will import many other items, because you have the buying power to pay for those imports. When your buying power is gone your imports will drop as they have dropped in recent months. That answers the gentleman's proposition with reference to the imports in 1929 as compared with the imports in 1938. You do not have the consuming ability now. Therefore, the imports do not come in. Of course your exports override your imports under such a situation. So, the conditions the gentleman is talking about is nothing to brag about whatsoever. It is a shame and a disgrace to the country that we have such low income and buying power now in operation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina

[Mr. Thomas S. McMillan].

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that at the outset of consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule our Republican friends have taken occasion to challenge the paragraph in the bill carrying the appropriation for the continuation of the reciprocal trade agreement work. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it comes with poor grace on the part of our Republican friends to undertake to compare conditions in America today with those of 1929 to 1932. Why, it is absurd, perfectly absurd, and every intelligent man of this House knows it is. As our friend the gentleman from Massachusetts said this morning, every leading recognized Republican authority of the country has supported this reciprocal trade agreement work. I read now a statement on this point by Secretary Hull made before the committee a few weeks ago. Said Secretary Hull:

I may say that I think nearly three-quarters of the press of the Nation regardless of political considerations have supported our trade-agreements program for the reasons that we have so often stated. The general public so far as our information goes is favorable by a large margin toward it. I think it was Mr. James G. Blaine who originated the basic idea. He did not get it through the Congress to the full extent, but it is a fact that he and later President McKinley, and then President Theodore Roosevelt, strove earnestly to carry forward this broad economic idea which does not mean the old-time Democratic position about the tariff any more than it means the old-time position of any of the other party tariffs. It means—a carefully worked out plan and purpose to go out to the other nations to see what concessions they can make to develop mutually helpful and profitable trade.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the position of the Secretary of State. This is the first time, to the knowledge of any of us, here in this Congress, that there has been an effort to work out a satisfactory trade agreement without political affiliations having any part in it. If there is one thing to be said in support of this reciprocal trade agreement program, it is that during this administration for the past 4 years there have been experts employed on this work without any partisan consideration entering into their appointment; and now, Mr. Chairman, here today after 4 years of this program we find the first effort to strike out the paragraph which means that if it is done all these experts, all these men, highly trained without regard to any party considerations, are here thrown out of employment and that the administration will not have the benefit of their views. [Applause.] I say to you, Mr. Chairman, let us lay aside this party question and vote for the amendment to restore this amount of money for this very desirable purpose. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Carter) there were—ayes 127, noes 98.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES (DEPARTMENTAL)

Contingent expenses: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including stationery, furniture, fixtures; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including rental exchange and repair thereof (not to exceed $27,500); purchase and exchange of books, maps, and periodicals, domestic and foreign, and, when authorized by the Secretary of State, dues for library membership in societies or associations which issue publications to members only or at a price to members lower than to subscribers who are not members, newspapers, teletype rentals, and tolls (not to exceed $12,000); purchase, including exchange, of one passenger-carrying automobile and two automobile mail wagons; maintenance, repair, and storage of motor-propelled vehicles, to be used only for official purposes (including one passenger-carrying vehicle for the Secretary of State and one for the general use of the Department); streetcar fare; traveling expenses, including not to exceed $5,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Department of State when authorized by the Secretary of State; refund of fees erroneously charged and paid for the issue of passports to persons who are exempted from the payment of such fee by section 1 of the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, approved June 4, 1920 (22 U. S. C. 214, 214a); the examination of estimates of appropriations in the field; and other miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $138,000.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. Thomas S. McMillan: Page 4, line 2, after the word "rental", insert a comma.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do this simply for the purpose of getting in rather belatedly on the debate that has just taken place. I want to point out one or two things that seem to me perfectly obvious.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle object to imports. They say that imports are ruinous to agriculture and to various American industries. At the same time they are constantly contending that they want to restore world markets to American farmers. I do not care which of these things they want to contend for as long as they do not contend for both at the same time. We cannot do both at the same time. The truth of the matter is that unless you can get American exchange into the hands of foreign buyers you cannot have foreign markets. You have got to have some means of doing that, and there are only two or three of them. The main one is to buy yourself from foreign countries in order to give American exchange to foreign people who in turn can buy from you. There are other ways, too, which have come in for a good deal of criticism, such as purchasing gold, but the main one is by making purchases from people whom you want to make purchases from you.

America is a creditor Nation. We can no longer expect that we can get our exchange into the hands of other peoples without buying from them. I therefore think it is important for us to tell the absolute truth about these matters, and if we are going to take the position that we want to try to stop imports into the United States we must then recognize that we must find our entire market within this country for the goods we produce and go forward to try to develop a selfcontained economy. I do not think it is fair, or just, or right to try to ride both these horses at once. If you really want to restore world markets to the farmer you must necessarily make purchases abroad in order that people abroad can buy the things that you want to produce and in turn sell to them. If you believe our imports are hurtful then you must be prepared to increase domestic markets and the buying power of the people so as to make up for the loss of world markets.

I know of no better illustration of the truth uttered by President John Adams when he said that our troubles were all traceable to a fundamental "ignorance of the nature of coin currency and circulation" than the fact that under present circumstances, with our outworn methods of distributing purchasing power and creating money in this country, we believe that the more valuable goods we import into the country the worse off we are and the more valuable goods we send out the better off we are.

I just wanted to make the point that if you really want to restore world markets you must remember that you must buy abroad in order to enable foreign countries to make purchases from you. You cannot at the same time restore world markets and also cut off all imports. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

Promotion of foreign trade: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930," approved June 12, 1934 (48 Stat. 945), as amended, including personal services without regard to civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic reporting services, by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), contingent expenses, printing and binding, traveling expenses, and such other expenses as the President may deem necessary, $43,000. necessary, $43,000.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, as a sort of aftermath to the recent discussion on trade agreements, I desire to make a minor contribution, but one which I consider important. The gentleman from California just stated that our choice was somewhat between domestic and foreign markets. Not long ago I read a book by Samuel Crowther, one of the most distinguished of American economists, and he stated that in normal years our exports were but 6 percent of our production. He also stated that if we eliminated the intercompany relations—that is, where American plants had subsidiaries abroad-we only exported 3 percent of our national products. The rest of our production went into home consumption and was taken care of by the American home market, consisting of 130,000,000 people.

I would like the American people and the Members of the House to know that in normal years the American people consume 97 percent of our production and but 3 percent goes into exports. At the same time I want to emphasize the proposition cited here today by a gentleman on my own side of the aisle that the important thing to America is the protection of its home market—this rich, consuming, American market-and not to make all and sundry concessions to manufacturing and agricultural countries abroad for the purpose of stimulating exports.

As I visualize it, our standard of living is so distinct, it is so high, that the time may come, assuming our high standard of living still continues, when America under these conditions might well be self-contained. On that theory my conclusion is that the policies of the distinguished Secretary of State are wholly destructive of the American farmer, wholly destructive of the American industrialist and the American consumer. I wish I had time to expand on that. All of the propaganda paid for by the international bankers and all of the editorials from importer newspapers cannot alter or change this situation.

Our market is at home. Do not let us go all over the world like Don Quixote, tilting windmills and looking to right the wrongs of the world.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think the gentleman has presented a consistent argument. May I say that I am not at all sure he may not be correct, that we may come to the time when we will have to have self-contained economy. The point I want to stress is this: If that be true, then those who advocate it must face the fact that they must supply a market for those industries which depend largely on exports.

Mr. CULKIN. We are supplying a 97-percent market now, and if we shut off our exports the other 3 percent will be taken care of. There are only a half dozen commodities which we need to import. The gentleman knows that. Mr. VOORHIS of California. I know that.

Mr. CULKIN. Why go out in the world and trade off our markets in textiles, dairy products, or whatever it may be? It is not sound, because our standard of living is so absolutely distinct from the foreign producers. We hope it will always remain distinct.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman has practically answered my question. Why sacrifice a market that now consumes over 90 percent of all we produce for the little bit that we hope to get through exports?

Mr. CULKIN. I agree with my colleague from New York. The fact is both the American farmer and American labor are fed up on this hopeless program? [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make the point of order that in offering these pro forma amendments the gentlemen must confine themselves to the subject matter of the amendment and I shall insist hereafter that the Chair enforce this rule.

Mr. HINSHAW. I was going to enter into the debate only slightly, and if the gentleman will permit me to recount a little story in connection with this thing I would appreciate it.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is discussing a question which has been decided by the House. It does seem to me that the rules ought to be enforced.

Mr. HINSHAW. If I am out of order, the gentleman may

Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion concerning impressions. A great many years ago I worked in the stockyards in Chicago. At that time I became acquainted with one Wayne Dinsmore.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman must confine himself to the subject of his amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman on the other side spoke out of order and no objection was raised. If the gentleman over there desires to get technical we certainly will get technical over here. I think the gentleman ought to permit the gentleman from California to proceed.

Mr. TARVER. I have no desire whatever to be discriminatory. I have not heard all of the debate, but I am glad to say the portion of it I heard was very enlightening. If the gentleman wishes me to reserve the point of order as far as the present speaker is concerned, I will do so.

Mr. CARTER. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California is in order. You cannot build a building unless you build a foundation. He is now preparing the foundation for his argument, which will be strictly in order under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] will proceed in order.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this gentleman by the name of Wayne Dinsmore was secretary of the Horse Association of America, although now I believe it is the Horse and Mule Association, and he was a very smart man.

It was his contention in 1921, 1922, and 1923, when I knew him, that bringing mechanical equipment such as tractors, and so forth, into use on the farms was going to throw some 30 percent of the land then used for the purpose of raising feed for farm draft animals, the grain and forage crops, and for pasturage into production of food for human consumption, and that this 30 percent of land forced into production for consumption purposes would prove the ultimate ruination of the farmer through flooding the market with farm products. Whether or not his prognostication has come true, you here can judge. We do have a very considerable excess of farm land in production for consumption, and consequently we seek export markets. I look forward to the time when that 30 percent of land formerly used to support draft animals will be put back into production for the use of the farmer himself through the development of chemical processes with which you are all familiar and which some day, no doubt, will be perfected. I refer to what is known now as "farm chemurgic." In the meantime, we do have a problema problem that is demanding of us to make agricultural exports. I know the farmers are cooperating in this program all the way down the line. [Applause.]

I just wanted to bring this point to your attention. I am not entering into the debate otherwise.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Foreign intercourse-

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk read the title to the preceding paragraph and one or two lines of the paragraph, and then Members interrupted the reading of it and asked for recognition. I assumed they were addressing their remarks to the paragraph in controversy and that this one would be read after they finished their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. To which paragraph is the gentleman referring?

Mr. MAPES. The paragraph beginning on page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph was read.

Mr. MAPES. It was read in a very scientific manner, Mr. Chairman, and under circumstances which I think ought not to foreclose returning to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was under the definite impression the paragraph was read.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The paragraph was definitely read, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the Chairman that I was paying very strict attention to the reading. I understood the reading clerk to say "Promotion of foreign trade," when the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis] asked for recognition. That is as far as I understood the reading clerk to

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the gentleman heard the Clerk say "Foreign intercourse" instead of "Foreign trade."

Mr. MAPES. No; I did not understand the Clerk to get that far. I desired to make a point of order against certain language in that paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan comes too late. The paragraph has already been read, and the Clerk had proceeded with the reading of the next paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I was endeavoring to follow the reading, too, and my impression was that just the title of the paragraph beginning on page 6 has been read. If such is not the case, I ask unanimous consent that we return to this paragraph in order that the gentleman from Michigan may offer an amendment or make a point of order or do whatever it is he wishes to do.

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, what is the paragraph under discussion?

Mr. CARTER. The title of the paragraph is "Promotion of foreign trade."

Mr. COCHRAN. If we go back to the paragraph it will probably be subject to a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Surely it is.

Mr. COCHRAN. For the moment, I object, Mr. Chair-

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to repeat that I was following the reading very closely because I intended to make a point of order, and I understood the reading clerk to say only "Promotion of foreign trade," when the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis] asked for recognition and started to discuss the matter which had come up under the preceding paragraph.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. MAPES. Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman that I, too, was following the reading very closely because I wanted to move to strike out the last word in order to get the floor. I heard the Clerk say "$43,000", and then I rose.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, regardless of whether the paragraph was or was not read, I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, of course, I am not one to take advantage of a Member, especially when he says he did not hear the Clerk read the paragraph. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in order to give my friend, the gentleman from Michigan an opportunity to make his point of order, or submit an amendment, I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. COCHRAN. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk will read the paragraph referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

Promotion of foreign trade: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930", approved June 12, 1934 (48 Stat. 945), as amended, including personal services without regard to 945), as amended, including personal services without regard to civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic reporting services, by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), contingent expenses, printing and binding, traveling expenses, and such other expenses as the President may deem necessary, $43,000.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the following language in lines 11 and 12:

Without regard to civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I confine the point of order to that specific language in order to avoid a long debate, such as we got into a little while ago.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman has confined his point of order to the specific language to which he has referred, I will concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this appropriation of $43,000 is to carry on the hearings on reciprocal-trade agreements. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I bring to the attention of the House again the fact that the administration is always talking about maintaining the civil service and then brings in bill after bill eliminating civil service from the provisions of such bill.

I want the Members on the Democratc side to realize that I have the highest respect for the Secretary of State. Mr. Hull, a very fine and a very courteous gentleman. He has a right to his own opinions. They are not mine. has been known as a free-trader. He has a perfect right to those opinions, but I believe our industries must be protected if we want to maintain our standard of living. If there be free trade, our standard of living will be lowered. Our workers cannot compete at good wages with low coolie wages. Everyone on the floor of Congress realizes that.

I cannot let go unchallenged the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that industries left New England during Republican administrations, and he indicated they were not leaving New England today under the New Deal administration. I refer the gentleman to the controversy in the newspaper, in which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey] claimed and took credit for having prevented the R. F. C. from granting a large loan in order that the South might move an industry to the South in order to compete with our New England manufacturers and take jobs away from our Massachusetts workers. Senator Longe, the junior Senator from Massachusetts, claimed credit, because he went to the President, for preventing the R. F. C. from making that loan to a firm in the South, which was to compete with our workers. Industries, under this New Deal, have not only moved south but they have moved to Brazil and have moved to other countries. Many of our northern concerns have closed down, and their mills and shops have been demolished in the past 5 years.

These facts cannot go unchallenged, and it is manifestly unfair for the gentleman to cry politics in this matter. Those from the farming area of the South, those from the manufacturing area of the South, are just as anxious to protect their industries as we are. They are placed today in a very embarrassing situation because they do not want to fight publicly and openly against the administration, but I know they want to keep sales of farm products for their farmers and also employment for their industrial workers.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SANDAGER. Will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts inform me whether she has been able to get any accurate information relative to that loan? I may say that I wrote to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation over a month ago, and I have not received the courtesy of a reply.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey] to have said-and this is from the newspaper—that the loan would not be made and that the industry would remain in Massachusetts. Others have had the same experience with the R. F. C. as the gentleman from Rhode Island, as numerous New England Congressmen have tried to help, and they have received no reply from the R. F. C. in this matter; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey], in whose district the industry is located, states it will not move, and I sincerely hope that is true. The gentleman from Rhode Island knows only too well the number of idle spindles in his State and the number of mills that have been torn down.

I further wish to express at this time my very great distress that the commercial attachés are now to operate under the Department of State. We have heard again and again that we must trade with other countries. Under the State Department, or under the Foreign Service, those diplomats are going to try to maintain the friendliest relations possible with other countries, and my fear is that every time the advantage in trade will be given to the foreign country rather than our own. Some one has stated truly, I believe it was the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case], that this country is "exporting jobs and importing materials.

I carnestly hope the reciprocal-trade agreements at least will be changed so as to make them reciprocal; that is, have our country sell our goods and then we will buy the things that will not interfere with our own manufacturers or our own agriculture. We cannot afford to lose our own great domestic markets, and put our workers out of employment.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In respect of the reciprocal-trade agreements, is it not true that, perhaps, the Czechoslovakian trade agreement is an outstanding example of the damage that can be done to an industry, namely, the shoe industry, because of the tremendous influx of foreign-made goods, and then when the influx stops, as it did after the German intervention in Czechoslovakia, the shoe industry in our part of the country became, and has continued to be, more flourishing than in many, many years?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is a very good example and I thank the gentleman for bringing it up. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN INTERCOURSE

Salaries, Ambassadors and Ministers: Ambassadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Poland, Spain, Turkey, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and Venezuela, at $17,500 each;

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order in the paragraph to the words "Colombia" in line 21,

"Panama" in line 22, "Union of Soviet Socialist Republics" and "Venezuela" in line 23. I make the point of order that each is an appropriation not authorized by law. Title 22, section 31, of the Code sets forth the act of March 2, 1909, which provides:

No new ambassadorships shall be created unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress.

As to the other ambassadorships which are listed in this paragraph, they have been provided for by acts of Congress. As to these four, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has no statutory authorization, and the other three are new ambassadorships created in South America during last fall by the Department of State, for which there is no authority in law. There is not only no authority, but the appropriation is in clear violation of the act of Congress which I have quoted, which forbids the creation of new ambassadorships unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to be heard? First, will the gentleman advise the Chair as to whether or not the Ambassadors or Ministers in the act referred to were appointed and have been confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The three Ambassadors referred to were appointed and confirmed by the Senate, as will be found by reference to the Congressional Record of March 17, page 2919. The appointment of the Ambassador to Panama was confirmed by the Senate on March 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question? The Chair would like to know whether or not the gentleman has taken the position that the Ambassadors or Ministers referred to have not been actually appointed and confirmed.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, that is not the point at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman concedes that these Ambassadors have been appointed and confirmed by the Senate? Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I concede that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels justified in taking judicial notice of the appointment of these Ambassdors to these various countries named.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is not that these Ambassadors have not been appointed and confirmed. My objection is that there is no authorization in law for the increase in their salaries, and that the attempt to create a new embassy is in direct violation of an act of Congress. I concede that, under the Constitution, the President has power to label his emissary an Ambassador, with the advice and consent of the Senate; but this power cannot be extended to constitute legislative authorization for a salary increase, and the precedents of this body, improperly holding the law of 1909 unconstitutional, have ignored this distinction between the constitutional power of the President and the legislative responsibility of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. This specific question seems to have been passed upon on a former occasion. In Cannon's Precedents, volume 7, section 1248, we find the following language:

The power of the President to appoint diplomatic representatives to foreign governments and to determine their rank is derived from the Constitution and may not be circumscribed by statutory enact-

Where the President has appointed a diplomatic representative and the appointment has been approved by the Senate, a point of order does not lie against an appropriation for the salary of such representative unless the rate of pay has been otherwise fixed by law. A statute prohibiting the creation of new ambassadorships except by act of Congress is in contravention of the President's constitutional prerogatives and will not support a point of order against an appropriation for the salary of an ambassadorship not created by act of Congress but appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The President, at will, may raise a legation to an embassy or reduce an embassy to a legation, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding, and where the President has made such change and followed it with an appointment which has been approved by the Senate, an appropriation for the salary of the appointee is in order unless the rate of pay is in contravention of law.

In the decision to which the Chair has referred the Honorable Horace M. Towner, of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, referred to the identical statute referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, and that was taken into consideration at the time the decision was rendered.

In view of the precedents of the House, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schaffer of Wisconsin: Strike out the paragraph beginning with line 18, page 6, and ending with line 24.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, our distinguished New Deal leader, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman fom North Carolina [Mr. Doughton], bitterly criticized the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act and blamed the Republican Party and that tariff act for most of the political and economic ills of America. The facts and the record indicate that the depression was primarily the result of the World War, which we were told by our Democratic brethren, was to make the world safe for democracy and end all wars.

This has made the world safe for dictators, and most of the nations of the world, including the United States, are now arming to the teeth in preparation for future wars.

The Democratic Party got us into the World War which made America safe for old man depression.

If you go back into the Record when the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was considered, you will find that almost every Democratic Member of this body and the other body were vociferous champions of a high-protective tariff, in most cases embargo tariffs, to protect the products of their districts and their States from unfair competition of cheap foreign imports. Senator Walsh pleaded for an embargo tariff on copper. Southern Democratic Congressmen and Senators pleaded for an embargo tariff on vegetables from Cuba and other lands. The Democratic gentlemen from Texas pleaded for an embargo tariff on Angora goats and oil. Democratic gentlemen from Kentucky pleaded for a high-protective tariff on coal. It would take hours to name all of the high-protective tariff positions supported by our Democratic brethren.

We should not overlook the fact that in the 1930 election the Democratic Party obtained control of the House of Representatives where tariff legislation must originate, under the Constitution. We had a Democratic majority in the House after the 1930 election, and a Democratic Speaker, Mr. GARNER. It is true that the Republicans had a paper majority of one in the Senate after the 1930 election. The new dealers had control of that body, however, since a number of the Members were only Republicans while running for office. So the New Deal has had control of the Senate and the House from the 1930 November election. What did you do? You had control of the House wherein tariff legislation must originate, under the Constitution. You demagogued and denounced the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill and yet when you had control of the House after the 1930 election you did not even bring before that body a bill to reduce one tariff rate, not even the rate on aluminum pants buttons one-half of 1 percent. This notwithstanding your vitriolic denunciations of Andy Mellon and his alleged aluminum monopoly which you charged was protected by an embargo tariff.

You now compare the condition of the country under Democratic and Republican administrations, and praise the Democratic and denounce the Republican. Let us examine a part of the record. I hold in my hand the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives on House Joint Resolutions 209 and 246, the W. P. A. appropriation bill. I quote from page 189 of the hearings, which were conducted in the year of our Lord 1939.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow], a Democratic member of the Appropriations Committee, was examining Colonel Harrington, the Democratic W. P. A. Administrator, and said:

Colonel, how was it before we had any Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, or before there was any Federal relief?

Colonel Harrington answered:

I only know in a general way. I imagine you know as well as I do. They were fed by the Salvation Army, and in some cases by municipal soup kitchens.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon], another Democratic member of the committee and a New Deal leader, then said:

Of course, at that time the need was not so great. We have now the greatest destitution in the history of the United States.

Colonel Harrington replied:

That is correct.

Explain that away, my New Deal Democratic friends. One of your congressional leaders, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] and your other New Deal leader, Colonel Harrington, who is now in charge of the administration of W. P. A., testified in the year 1939 as follows:

We have now the greatest destitution in the history of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with their indictment of the New Deal, which has had complete control of the Federal Government for 6 long years.

Now, my friends, it will not be long before our distinguished friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] will come down knocking on the doors of Congress, asking for a high protective embargo tariff on imported cotton. Let us compare the cotton record of the New Deal Democratic administration and the Republican administration. I have here reports from the State Department indicating that in 1932 Brazil exported 2,377 bales of cotton. In 11 months of the year 1938, under the New Deal, Brazil exported 1,134,000 bales of cotton. We find in the year 1932 when the Republicans had control of our Federal Government America exported 8,916,000 bales of cotton, while we exported only 4,316,000 bales in 1938 when our Democratic New Deal brethren had control.

New Deal legislation and bureaucratic control is responsible for the deplorable condition which now exists in our American cotton industry. Is it not time for Representatives from the cotton States to oppose the planned economy which Mordecai Ezekiel and Henry Wallace have imported direct from Moscow? Is it not time for them to oppose the handouts of millions of dollars to Brazil and other South American dictatorship countries which have been taking our American cotton-export market?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding on the part of those of us in charge of the bill, and I hope the membership understands this, we are trying to get along with the bill now. I think we have been rather liberal in the time that has been extended for the purpose of debate. We want to finish this bill this afternoon. Hereafter, I must serve notice on the membership, in addressing the Committee it will be necessary to confine the remarks to the paragraph under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representation allowances, Foreign Service: For representation allowances as authorized by the act approved February 23, 1931 (22 U. S. C. 12), $140,000.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stefan: On page 10, line 25, after the comma, strike out "$140,000" and insert "$125,000."

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith. I would prefer to eliminate this entire paragraph which relates to representation allowances but I realize this would be useless and that such an amendment would be defeated. But I feel the membership of the House should go along with me in cutting this amount down to what it was a year ago. The $140,000 in this item is $15,000 more than was allowed last year for this entertainment fund. The increase in my opinion is merely the first wedge to include nearly every employee we have in foreign missions to receive an entertainment fund from the Public Treasury. The increase represents the camel getting its nose under the tent. If we allow this increase, they will be back here next year for another increase and soon the entire camel will be under the tent and we will have demands for tremendous amounts for these people for lavish entertainments.

I want the membership of this House to know something about this item. It comes to you simply reading, "Representation allowance for Foreign Service, $140,000." You should know that this is the "entertainment fund" which is used by our foreign representatives to give dances, parties, teas, and other social functions. It is used to buy punch, pastries, fine foods, cakes, and so forth. No one will deny that liquor is served at these functions. It can legally be purchased with this money but, by Executive order, we are told it is not being used for that purpose.

I know that our foreign representatives must give some kind of social functions, because they must return the entertainments given them by other people. I am not opposed to dignified and economic social functions if they have to be held, but why should we increase the appropriation? Whindicate here that we favor lavish and bigger and more entertainments? Let us be sane and give them just what they had last year instead of increasing the amount.

I hope the membership will support me in this effort to serve notice on our highly paid Foreign Service officers that we want some common sense in the expenditure of taxpayers' money.

Here is a bill appropriating over $19,000,000 for the Department of State, and we are asked to increase their entertainment fund. What I ask is a small decrease compared with the total. It represents only $15,000, but it is the principle I am after. A determination to check right now what may become a tremendous appropriation next year or in the years to follow. I believe the regular amount of $125,000 is plenty of money for entertainment.

It is too much, in my opinion, in the face of conditions in our own country. Here we are with a public debt of over $40,000,000,000. Here we are faced with hundreds of letters from our own people at home who are out of jobs; farmers who are losing their farms; people who do not have enough money with which to properly clothe or feed their children. Yet we are asked to appropriate an increase for our foreign officers for entertainment purposes. Such extravagance is not consistent with conditions in my own district in Nebraska. This money would go a long way toward helping my own people, who today are facing another drought, and who fear another failure of small grain. I wish I could take some of you gentlemen through my district-the Third District of Nebraska-and show you first-hand what has happened to the real producer in America. I wish I could take you through Boone, Knox, Antelope, Greeley, and other counties of my district and show you the abandoned farms. I wish I could show you the conditions of the retail trade there. I wish I could take you into the homes of our people there. I wish I could have my own people tell you what they think of appropriating money for entertainment in these days of trouble and foreclosures. I am sure you would go along with me in these efforts to stop extravagant expenditures of taxpayers' money. I know that you would agree with me in my continued statements that we must concentrate on our own troubles at home and keep our noses out of foreign entanglements.

By adopting my amendment, Mr. Chairman, I feel we shall indicate to the people at home that we are actually doing something here to safeguard the interests of our own people.

I will admit that my subcommittee has cut expenditures in these appropriations for the Department of State wherever we found it possible and that there will be some effort later to put back what we cut out. But we are not niggardly in these appropriations for the State Department. They amount to over $19,000,000. We took into consideration the unsettled conditions of the world and we respect the Department of State because it is our first line of defense, and we depend upon it to take care of our foreign interests. We realize the great importance of this Department. But all of our Departments, in my personal opinion, take advantage of every "break" they can, and as a result we are asked to provide greater funds. Here we are confronted with statements that "chaotic world conditions" make for more work for the State Department. Then come demands for more money for that Department. The Army takes advantage of the same "break" and demands more money. The Navy finds it a real "break" and we pass the biggest peacetime Navy bill in our history. I feel we are providing sufficient funds for all these Departments. But when they take advantage of every "break" and make demands which go beyond reason I feel it my duty as the Representative of worried people back home to take some

I want to repeat that we are not niggardly in our appropriations to the Department of State. When I say we should not increase the money for entertainment purposes for our Foreign Service officers I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that we pay our Ambassadors and Ministers a lot more money than is paid to the same class of officers by other governments. We pay our Ambassadors over $17,000 a year. We are making new Ambassadors this year in small countries where Ministers could do the work. We pay the Ministers from ten to twelve thousand a year. These foreign officers get their homes free; they get their light and heat and living allowances free; we pay their transportation to and from their stations; we pay the transportation to and from the United States for themselves and their entire families, and we even pay for the transportation of their household goods. They receive retirement and disability funds. So you see we are not niggardly. Yet they come here and ask that we not only allow them their regular $125,000 for entertainment purposes, they now ask that the fund be increased to $140,000. I for one, Mr. Chairman, am opposed to it, and I have a feeling that my own people at home feel as I do.

Mr. Chairman, the argument will be made by those opposing my amendment that this small increase is to give some entertainment money to the minor officers in the foreign missions who do not have it now. I feel that the higher officials who have the $125,000 now can divide some of it with their minor officials.

Another argument will be made that representatives of other governments get a much larger amount for entertainment purposes. The answer to that is that these officials get a much smaller salary than we pay to our officers.

In asking that my amendment be adopted I do not wish to cast any reflection on the fine service which is being rendered to us by our Department of State and our Foreign Service officers. I wish to go on record as stating that we have the best Foreign Service officers in the world. They are rendering unusually fine service, of which I am sure we are all proud. They represent our first line of defense, and are just as important to our safety and welfare as are the Departments of War and Navy. I have been acquainted with many of the fine officials of the Department of State and I feel that the country should know that there is no finer, more patriotic, more loyal group of men in the employ of our Federal Government.

In spite of all of these commendations, which I make with the utmost sincerity and seriousness, Mr. Chairman, I feel they, too, have a responsibility to the taxpayers of the Nation. The time has come for every employee of our Government to realize the conditions as they really exist and cooperate in our desperate efforts to expend the people's money more wisely and more economically. Spending it for entertainment in these days when we have millions of our own people walking the streets looking for any kind of job is not wise expenditure in my humble opinion.

I hope my amendment will be adopted.

I have been asked whether or not this is the so-called "wine fund." There is nothing in the law that says they cannot use it for that, although there is an Executive order saying they cannot.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is there anything in the law to prohibit them from buying Scotch?

Mr. STEFAN. There is nothing in the law prohibiting them from using it legally to buy liquor, but they do not, I am reliably informed. By an Executive order they cannot buy liquor with this money. It is for parties and official entertainment. I feel $125,000 is sufficient amount for this purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the membership is really familiar with this representation allowance that the Government affords to our Foreign Service men and women. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Stefan] has just told you, it totals only $125,000 annually.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to have to oppose the amendment offered by my colleague; but when you men and women stop for a moment and realize what $140,000 means to some 75 or 80 foreign missions, you will realize that when it is allocated to the Ambassadors and Ministers it amounts to only a few hundred dollars per mission. Let us, for purpose of comparison, call attention to what some of the foreign embassies in Washington receive as a representation allowance. The British Ambassador here in the city of Washington has a $67,000 annual allowance. Cuba's Ambassador in Washington receives $35,000 a year. As a matter of fact, the representative of every country in the city of Washington, whether Ambassador or Minister, has a representation allowance in some cases almost equal to half the total amount we allow for our entire Foreign Service. What is this increase for?

The Members who have been abroad know that it is not always the Ambassador or the Minister of our missions who entertain. Quite often it is a member of the staff of the embassy, the secretaries, those fellows who are over there on modest salaries. Those are the fellows for whom this increase is intended. You gentlemen who have been abroad know what the problem is to these officials. They want to entertain you, and they have the right to entertain you; and we have the obligation to see that our representatives abroad have sufficient means with which to do a little entertaining of an absolutely necessary nature, not only of our people when they go abroad but others, such as visits of the fleet, and so forth. We have the obligation to see that they are treated in the matter of these allowances in a way comparable to the standards and the dignity of our country abroad.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, in view of this situation, that the Members will not vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I think there is a great deal in what the gentleman from South Carolina has said. He tells the committee that the British Ambassador has an allowance of $85,000 for entertainment purposes, and that the Ambassador of Cuba has $50,000 a year for entertainment purposes. I assume that other foreign countries allow their representatives in Washington proportionate amounts. I fear the amount carried by this bill is far too small, and my reason for this statement is this: When we see what England with her $85,000 got, and what Cuba with her $50,000 got in the way of trade concessions from this Government, we should make this sum $5,000,000. With such a sum we would get somewhere in negotiating future trade agreements.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bland). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, altogether, too frequently persons not qualified, attempt to discuss reciprocal-trade agreements and the effect upon the automobile industry. Their expressions are contrary to the views of the automobile industry.

Our national economy has been geared to support millions of workers in industries which are vitally dependent upon foreign markets. The automobile industry comes within this group.

When the present administration assumed leadership of the country the foreign trade of the United States was stymied behind excessive tariff walls and trade barriers of various descriptions. To free the channels of foreign commerce from these uneconomic devices required sober judgment and careful consideration. After thorough deliberation, Congress, on June 12, 1934, authorized the reciprocal trade agreements program.

The scores of increases in exports from the United States since the first trade agreement became effective, clearly demonstrates the effectiveness of the program as an instrument to restore foreign markets for American producers.

The high degree of development and growth reached by the automobile industry makes profitable foreign sales opportunities increasingly important. The decline in automobile production running concurrently with export contraction following 1929 reflects the value and importance of foreign markets to the automobile industry. Exports of automobiles and parts declined from $539,298,000 in 1929 to $191,268,000 in 1934, the year of authorization of the trade-agreements program.

Concessions on automobiles and parts have been obtained in 17 trade agreements concluded to date.

Trade statistics published by the Department of Commerce show that trade agreements have aided in restoring foreign markets for American automobiles and parts. The value of exports to foreign countries which granted concessions have increased 48.3 percent, or from $71,820,000 to $106,513,000 between 1934 and 1938. The value of exports to all other countries increased 38.8 percent, or from $119,448,000 to $165,793,000 between 1934 and 1938.

That trade agreements have contributed to restore employment opportunities and prosperity in the automobile industry is also clear. Data in the Census of Manufactures recently released show that production of automobiles has increased in value by $1,234,200,000 between 1925, the first year in which the trade-agreements program commenced to function, and 1937; employment of wage earners increased by 91,500 and employment of salaried employees increased by 13,600 between the same 2 years. It is amply clear from these figures that the trade-agreements program, by reopening foreign markets for automobiles, has also brought a fuller measure of prosperity to thousands of Americans.

Moreover, there exists another and broader aspect to the whole program of trade agreements—the benefits indirectly received by many industries as a result of the direct concessions obtained on automobiles. A study recently published by the American Automobile Association discloses that 54 percent of total United States consumption of malleable iron is used in the construction of automobiles and automotive products, 20 percent of steel, 17 percent of copper, 13 percent of aluminum, 8.5 percent of cotton, 31 percent of lead, 28 percent of nickel, 12 percent of tin, 73 percent of plate glass, and 67 percent of leather. Expressed in simple terms these figures emphasize the fundamental fact that the program as a whole is in the interest of the entire country.

In a radio broadcast a short time ago, Mr. Edgar W. Smith, vice president of General Motors Overseas Corporation stated:

The businesslike manner in which the State Department has dealt with the tariff problem has given us, to date, 19 trade agreements which have greatly expanded our exports, without harming, in the instance of the reciprocal imports, a single efficient industry or a single producer of basic commodities in the United States.

The program is not, by itself, a cure-all for the economic ills of the country. Nor does it promise a complete solution of the economic problems demanding our attention. But it is a fundamental, a sound, and an important contribution to the solution of those problems, and no amount of misrepresentation or misleading use of trade statistics by critics of the program can alter this fact.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the language at the bottom of page 19, "without reference to the Classification Act of 1923 as amended.'

This language does not apply to the civil service. What is the purpose of it, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. This language, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, is only intended to provide $6,500 for the expenses of a meeting of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Experts. I am sure the gentleman would not want to have the Civil Service Classification Act apply to a meeting of that sort.

Mr. MAPES. Does the qualification "without reference to the Classification Act" only apply to the portion of the paragraph to which the gentleman is referring?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. That is right.

Mr. MAPES. The $6,500 item?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. It applies up to the semicolon shown in line 18, page 19.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question.

Will the gentleman in charge of the bill turn to page 20, line 7, and tell the committee what progress the Convention Relating to Liquor Traffic in Africa expects to make with

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that I will have to look up the justification sheet for that. I do not recall offhand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very vital matter.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I think I can give him the information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, out of a charitable instinct which always impels me, I withdraw the inquiry. The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO Salaries and expenses: For expenses of meeting the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, 1906, and 1933 between the United States and Mexico, and of compliance with the act approved August 19, 1935, as amended (49 Stat. 660, 1370), operation and maintenance of the Rio Grande rectification project and of the American dam and canal feature of the Rio Grande rectification project consoliration projects consoliration projects. Grande canalization project; construction and operation of gaging stations where necessary and their equipment; personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; fees for proand rent in the District of Columbia and eisewhere; lees for professional services at rates and in amounts to be determined by the Secretary of State; expenses of attendance at meetings which in the discretion of the Commissioner may be necessary for the efficient discharge of the responsibilities of the Commission (not to exceed $500); traveling expenses, including transportation of effects; printing and binding; law books and books of reference; subscriptions to foreign and domestic newspapers and periodicals; subscriptions to foreign and domestic newspapers and periodicals; purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger- and freight-carrying vehicles; hire, with or without personal services, of work animals, and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment; purchase of rubber boots and waders for official use of employees; purchase of ice; drilling and testing of dam sites, by contract if deemed necessary, and purchase in the field of planographs and lithographs and of one special electrically operated typewriter, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); equipment and such other miscellaneous expenses as the Secretary of State may deem proper $193,000. proper, $193,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he has ascertained whether or not there is money in the Treasury to pay these various appropriations? I heard today that we have just about reached the debt limit fixed in the Second Liberty Loan law.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I might suggest to the gentleman that his colleague, sitting behind him, in charge of the bill on the minority side, can give him the information.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am a little apprehensive.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I may say from my own observation that the gentleman from California is quite an authority on this subject.

Mr. KNUTSON. An evening paper carries the following Administration forces were reported authoritatively today to be drafting a new spending-lending program involving billions in Federal funds.

The program has not yet taken definite form, it was learned, but is being put in shape for submission to President Roosevelt and possible transmission to Congress.

As tentatively outlined, it would include: Release of $1,500,000,000 of the Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund and use of the money to finance a Nation-wide homeailding program.

Establishment of new Federal machinery for loans to business, with emphasis on advances to small firms.

Liberalization of social-security benefits, with discussion centering on old-age pensions of $40 monthly for single persons and $60 monthly for married persons.

Government insurance of loans for utility construction.

Reduction of the 5-percent interest rate on construction loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Government purchase of new railroad equipment and its rental to the carriers.

In connection with the consideration of this bill, may I ask the gentleman if any thought was given to this ambitious program which, if it is put into effect, would certainly insure making the country safe for the Democratic Party in 1940? I would like to have some information on whether or not after we have carried out the all-embracing program which is announced in the Evening Star there will be any money left for the appropriations that are carried in this bill? Has the gentleman any definite information on that?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I think our friend from California, the gentleman over on the minority side in charge of the bill for the minority, might give the gentleman the information he desires. The gentleman is quite an authority on this question. If the gentleman from California is unable to give it to him, I respectfully refer him to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the majority leader any information on this program which is outlined in the evening paper? [Pause.] Evidently not.

Mr. RAYBURN. Evidently not. Mr. KNUTSON. Is history to repeat itself? In 1935 Congress unwisely gave the President $4,880,000,000 free from all restrictions to do with as he saw fit in fighting the depression. The election returns in November 1936 showed that the money had been put to good use politically. I am wondering if the one and one-half billions above referred to would be used to influence the next election. I would indeed be surprised if it were not.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ninth International Seed Testing Congress: For the expenses of official entertainment and other expenses authorized by the Secretary of State in connection with holding the Ninth International Seed Testing Congress in the United States, as authorized by and accordance with the act approved April 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 201),

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. Can the chairman tell us where the Ninth International Seed Testing Congress is to be held?

With the following committee amendments:

On page 34, line 25, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

On page 36, line 3, after the word "employee", insert the words "except fingerprint classifiers."

The committee amendments were agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

PENAL AND CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Salaries and expenses: For every expenditure authorized by law or by orders and regulations made in pursuance of law, not otherwise provided for, requisite for and incident to the support of prisoners, and the maintenance and operation of Federal penal and correctional institutions; expenses of interment or transporting remains of deceased inmates to their homes in the United States; purchase of not to exceed 20 passenger-carrying automobiles; purchase of 2 busses in an aggregate amount not exceeding $14,000; maintenance and repair of passenger-carrying automobiles: exchase of 2 busses in an aggregate amount not exceeding $14,000; maintenance and repair of passenger-carrying automobiles; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Prison Service when authorized in writing by the Attorney General; traveling expenses of members of advisory boards authorized by law incurred in the discharge of their official duties; packing, crating, drayage, and transportation, not to exceed 5,000 pounds in any one case of household effects of employees, whether shipped by railroad or by motortruck, when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty; uniforms for the guard force; newspapers, books, and periodicals; firearms and ammunition; purchase and exchange of farm products and livestock; under the following heads: Provided, That any part of the appropriations under this heading used for payment of salaries of personnel employed in the operation of prison commissaries shall be reimbursed from commissary earnings, and such reimbursement shall be in addition to the amounts appropriated herein.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hull: On page 42, line 18, after the ord "herein", insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of the appropriations under the heading 'Penal and Correctional Institutions' shall be used for payment for oleomargarine or other butter substitutes."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to have the penal and correctional institutions of the Government use butter instead of oleomargarine. Last year these institutions used approximately 400,000,000 pounds of oleo. Heretofore Congress has abolished the purchase of oleo in the Army, including the camps of the C. C. C., and has abolished the use of it in the veterans' hospitals. Practically no other institution of the Government is now using oleomargarine except the penal and correctional institutions.

I should like to call attention to the fact that at present the Government of the United States is holding 95 percent of all the storage butter in the country, part of that purchased by the Government under the appropriation a year ago for the purpose of stabilizing the dairy markets. The Government is now holding approximately 60,000,000 pounds of that butter. Since the time the Government stepped out of the market and allowed this surplus to go undistributed the price of other dairy products in this country has fallen approximately 20 percent, and on butter about 25 percent.

Last year the Government purchased approximately 152,-000,000 pounds of butter. It does not seem logical to me that the Government should continue to buy butter and other dairy products for the purpose of stabilizing the market and at the same time, for the very small economy concerned, continue to use oleomargarine in any of its institutions. There is a bill, which will be before us in the House in a few days, setting aside a further sum for the purpose of stabilizing the markets, not only of dairy products but also on fresh fruits and vegetables, cotton, and other commodities. If we are going to continue this policy of stabilizing the market, certainly there is no reason why any portion of this appropriation should be used in these penal and correctional institutions for the purchase of oleomargarine.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In order to get some real benefit from the Government purchase of this so-called surplus butter, does not the gentleman believe we will have to plug the holes in the tariff wall? If Uncle Sam buys up the surplus American butter and permits millions of pounds of foreign butter to come in here to replace it, we are not going to make the Government purchase of surplus butter effective.

Mr. HULL. Yes; but I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the price of butter is now so low that there is practically no butter coming into this country. Last year the imports of butter, I believe, amounted to only 456,000 pounds, as compared with approximately 22,000,000 pounds which was imported in 1937. It is these low prices which are depressing the dairy industry and causing serious distress, especially in those sections of the country which produce the larger part of the butter, cheese, condensed milk, and so forth. The 20-percent decline in the price of dairy products in this country is not a small item. In the State of Wisconsin alone it will amount to more than $40,000,000, an equal amount in the State of Iowa, and about the same amount in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I am inclined to go along with the gentleman's amendment, because I as a member of this committee put into the hearings a table showing the amount of substitutes used in the prisons instead of butter. You will find in those hearings a table showing how much surplus food commodities was given to these prisons by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Included in these commodities was a tremendous amount of sugar, but absolutely no butter, of which we have a great surplus. I am very much in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HULL. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska, and would say that the exact figure as given in the table he mentions is 396,000 pounds.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. VAN ZANDT. Did not this Congress a few years ago rule oleomargarine out of the Veterans' Administration facilities?

Mr. HULL. It did. Furthermore, it has ruled it out of every other Government institution except these. I am asking that the Government continue that policy and put butter, some of the surplus butter, if need be, into use in these prisons and other institutions instead of using oleomargarine. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by our friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull], of course, appeals to many of us who are interested in our farm problems and the farmers of the country and, particularly, the dairy industry, which is directly concerned. However, there are the oleomargarine people to be considered and there are still a lot of them in the country; and when it comes to the matter of employment, putting out of employment one group of citizens offsets the employment of another group, and to that extent I can see no gain whatever in the amendment offered by the gentleman from However, let us go a step further and look at it from the standpoint of Uncle Sam. This year you will find in the report on this bill that we have reduced the per capita cost of the support of prisoners in our penal institutions by onehalf cent per day per prisoner. If this amendment is adopted, it simply means that the little saving we have made by the reduction of one-half cent per prisoner per day will be more than taken up by the additional cost of this amendment because, by a little figuring here, this would cost, based on the population in our penal institutions, between $40,000 and $50,000 annually.

I have every sympathy in the world for the dairy interests and for the farmers and all the men engaged in the production of butter, but at the same time we have other interests here to be considered, such as those who are engaged in the production of oleomargarine products.

If you gentlemen have had occasion to look over this record, you have found that more than $3,000,000 of the $6,-000,000 of increase under the Department of Justice has been due to the expansion of our penal institutions. This additional money is required to take care of our constantly increasing prison population.

The record shows that the per capita cost of every prisoner that goes into one of our security Federal institutions is $2,750. That figure represents the capital investment per prisoner.

Now, with all this additional cost to the taxpayers of this country and all this expansion of facilities, are we now going to cut out the use of oleomargarine and provide for the use of butter only at an additional cost of $50,000? I do not believe you will want to do that, and I ask you to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin) there were-ayes 41, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Salaries: For the Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices; Reporter of the Court; and all other officers and employees, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Court, except as otherwise provided by law, and who may be employed and assigned by the Chief Justice to any office or work of the Court, $455,000.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 47, line 20, change the figures "$455,000" to "$445,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses: For miscellaneous expenses of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be expended as the Chief Justice may approve, $25,000.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 48, following line 3, insert a new paragraph, as follows: "For the purchase of books and periodicals for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress, and purchased by the Marshal of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $10,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Traveling expenses: For all necessary traveling expenses under the Department of Commerce, including all bureaus and divisions thereunder except the Bureau of the Census, and traveling expenses for the examinations authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide for retirement for disability in the Lighthouse Service," approved March 4, 1925 (33 U. S. C. 765), but not including travel properly chargeable to the appropriation herein for "Transportation of families and effects of officers and employees and allowances for living quarters," Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Provided, That not exceeding $3,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the hire of automobiles for travel on official business, without regard to the provisions of the act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat. 508), $455,900.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: On page 59, line 22, strike out "$455,900" and insert in lieu thereof "$458,400."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries by $10,000. Doubtless Members of the House have received notice that I would offer an amendment for $10,000 for an investigation of certain conditions in the fisheries.

Upon investigation, however, I find that it may be as well to break down the amount in detail. I am sure that the Department will carry out the purpose of Congress by attention to the particular matter that I have in mind. If this amendment is adopted, there will be some additions on page 86, which will bring the entire increase to $10,000. This change on page 59 arises from the fact that a part of the expenditure will be for travel expenses and a part for other purposes, making it necessary to ask for increases in the detailed items.

There has arisen in the industry a problem involving the discoloration of oysters in shipment. This has impaired their marketability in some instances, and it is desired to make an investigation to ascertain just what is the cause of the discoloration and what will correct it. I cannot, in the limited time I have, go into detail about it. I have heard of several instances at various places in the industry. There have been some instances in which the discolorations have developed after the oysters have been canned and shipped. The cause at present is unknown. Whatever it is, the edibility of the oyster does not seem to be impaired at all, but, if continued, the marketability would be seriously injured. Persons who are familiar with the oyster industry will know that that condition sometimes exists with respect to what is known as green gills. Those of us who live in the oyster sections know that green gills evidence a good oyster; that it does not inter-fere with the edibility of the oyster, but that if you try to sell them you find difficulty in doing so.

We want to find out the cause of this discoloration. The condition appears sporadically at different points. We do not want to have it go too far. There may be come reason which can be easily checked. The Bureau of Fisheries advises me that with the appropriations they receive they cannot undertake the necessary work. I tried to get an estimate from the Bureau of the Budget, and they are considering the matter, but so far I have not received any estimate, and it appears to me that $10,000 affecting an industry as large as this, which may be very vitally injured, is not asking too much. In a few cases the shippers have suffered loss from rejections of shipments, and it can be seen that a few cans which may be affected seriously affect the whole lot. For this reason I have asked you to increase this appropriation from $455,900 to $458,400. If that is agreed to, there will be a corresponding increase in other items, which will bring it up to an amount not exceeding $10,000.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland]. I am sure most of you know that the gentleman from Virginia has been very greatly interested for a number of years in the activities of the Bureau of Fisheries. The committee is very grateful to him for the very fine assistance and cooperation he has given us in connection with the Bureau's program. However, if you look over the record of the hearings and the review of the appropriations that have been made for the Bureau of Fisheries during the past few years you will find that Congress has been very generous with that Bureau. This year we have increased even over the estimates of the Budget one item for the Bureau of Fisheries. We recognize the value of the services this Bureau is rendering to the people of the country. It is a very fine organization.

However, we do have our limitations, and here is an illustration of it.

Here is an item in the way of an amendment that is requested over the estimates of the Budget. There is no Budget estimate for it. I am going to ask you at this time if you want to go along with the committee, to vote down the amendment. If, as the gentleman says, the Budget is considering this estimate, perhaps in time it will send the estimate down here even before the Congress adjourns, and then the question can be taken up by the deficiency committee, in the last deficiency bill, and the amendment I am sure would have the careful consideration of that committee. In view of the situation as it stands at this time, I ask you to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation herein under title III for traveling expenses shall be available in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the promotion of foreign and domestic commerce, or either, and also expenses of illustrating the work of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by showing of maps, charts, and graphs at such meetings, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I rise at this time to ask the chairman of the subcommittee how this appropriation is divided. Is this appropriation for foreign and domestic commerce as large as it was last year? I have felt that the Department of Commerce has been very much hampered in its work. It has not been allowed to function. Is the appropriation as large as it was last year?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Yes, it is. In fact, there are one or two items in the appropriation that have been increased over last year's appropriation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. What are you giving the foreign commerce commercial attachés?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I may say there is a total increase of $83,900 over last year's appropriation for this Bureau.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Then that will be transferred to the Department of State when they take over the work?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Well, not all of the appropriation, but part of it will. There are several types of work performed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce as the gentlewoman knows. Most of their services will still be retained in the Department of Commerce. It is only the foreign commerce service of the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce that will be transferred to the State Department.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I realize that. I am sorry it is being transferred, because I feel that is the department to take care of our commerce and help sell our products abroad. I know what splendid work the gentleman and the ranking minority Member from California [Mr. Carter] have done, and it is not the fault of this committee this reorganization will put it under the State Department.

I thank the gentleman.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

For beginning the work of taking, compiling, and publishing the Sixteenth Census of the United States, as authorized by the act of June 18, 1929 (13 U.S. C. 201-218), and for carrying on other authorized census work, within a limit of cost for the period July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1942, of $45,100,000, including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; contracts for the preparation of monographs on census subjects and other work of specialized character which cannot be accomplished through ordinary employment; per diem compensation of employees of the Department of Commerce and other departments and independent establishments of the Government who may be detailed for field work; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the collection of statistics, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce; purchase of books written authority of the Secretary of Commerce; purchase of books of reference, periodicals, maps, newspapers, manuscripts, first-aid outfits for use in the buildings occupied by employees of the census; purchase, exchange, maintenance, operation, and repair of a passenger-carrying automobile to be used on official business; a passenger-tarrying automobile to be used on official business; construction, purchase, or rental of punching, tabulating, sorting, and other labor-saving machines, including technical, mechanical, and other services in connection therewith; printing and binding, traveling expenses, streetcar fares, and all other contingent expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field, $21,900,000.

Committee amendment: On page 66, line 16, strike out the word "exchange" and insert the word "exchange" following the second comma in line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 66, line 23, strike out the period and insert the following language: "of which amount not to exceed $50,000 shall be available immediately."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Total, National Bureau of Standards, $2,166,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,914,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I feel I should not permit this item to pass without a reference to the splendid work that has been done by the Bureau of Lighthouses, which this year celebrates its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary and which, by order of the President in the plan last submitted to this House, will be merged with the Coast Guard.

It is especially significant to note the language in the report filed this year on the splendid work of the Bureau of Lighthouses. I read:

In 1932 the Lighthouse Bureau was operating 21,574 aids to navigation, and the appropriation for that year for the entire Service was $12,082,410. At the present time slightly over 29,000 aids are being maintained and operated on an appropriation of $11,737,000. The picture presented by this comparison is indeed a refreshing one, and the committee enthusiastically commends the adminis-tration of the Bureau that has made this record possible.

The Lighthouse Service is that branch of the Government which has charge of all aids to navigation on the coasts and rivers of the United States. These aids comprehend light-houses, lightships, buoys of all kinds, lighthouse tenders, beacons, sound fog signals consisting of bells, reed horns, steam and air whistles, diaphones and sirens, submarine fog signals, and all the most modern devices for marking channels, aiding navigation, and saving life and property.

Lighthouses and light beacons were maintained to some extent before the Revolution, probably the first on the American continent having been built by the Province of Massachusetts, in 1716, on Little Brewster Island at the entrance of Boston Harbor. Later lighthouses, with their respective dates of construction, were: Brant Point Light, Nantucket Harbor, Mass., 1746; Beavertail Light, Conanicut Island, Narrangansett Bay, R. I., 1749; New London Harbor Light, Conn., 1760; Sandý Hook Light, entrance to New York Bay, 1764; Cape Henlopen Light, entrance to Delaware Bay, Del., 1765; Charleston Light, on Morris Island, S. C., 1767; Plymouth Light, on Gurnet Point, Mass, 1768; Portsmouth Light, entrance to Portsmouth Harbor, N. H., 1771; Cape Ann Lights, Thatchers Island, Mass., 1771; Nantucket Light, Great Point, Nantucket Island, Mass., Newburyport Harbor Lights, Mass., 1788. Other lighthouse stations which had been undertaken by the Colonies, but which were not in operation when the Government of the United States was created were Portland Head Light, Maine. completed in 1791; Tybee Light, at the entrance to Savannah River, Ga., 1791; Bald Head Light at the entrance to Cape Fear River, N. C., 1796.

The Lighthouse Service is practically as old as the National Government. By the ninth law of the Congress of the United States approved August 7, 1789 (1 Stat. L. 53), which was the first law for any public work, it was provided that all expenses which should accrue from and after the 15th day of August 1789 in the necessary support, maintenance, and repairs of all lighthouses, beacons, buoys, and public piers erected, placed, or sunk before the passing of the act, at the entrance of or within any bay, inlet, harbor, or port of the United States, for rendering the navigation thereof easy and safe, shall be defrayed out of the Treasury of the United States. It was provided that none of the said expenses shall continue to be so defrayed by the United States after the expiration of 1 year from the day aforesaid, unless such lighthouses, beacons, buoys, and public piers shall in the meantime be ceded to and vested in the United States by the State or States, respectively, in which the same may be together with the lands and tenements thereunto belonging and together with the jurisdiction of the same.

When the law which resulted in the Lighthouse Service was passed in 1789. Viriginia had collected the materials for a lighthouse at Cape Henry, at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, but construction had not been commenced. The lighthouse at Cape Henry at the entrance to Chesapeake Bay was the first built by the United States, the work being included in the first appropriation made by Congress for lighthouse purposes on March 26, 1790.

Illustrative of the dangers suffered by these sentinels of the coasts are the damages and losses in life and property sustained by the Service on the occasion of the September (1938) hurricane. An assistant keeper of a station in Narragansett Bay lost his life, the wife of another keeper was drowned. and in a third case a keeper lost both wife and son. The Whale Rock Light Station, in the western passage of Narragansett Bay, close to Narragansett Pier, was completely swept from its base and destroyed. In this catastrophe the first assistant keeper, Walter B. Eberle, the only person at the station at the time, lost his life. The head keeper at the time was on shore and was prevented from returning to the station by the severity of the storm.

Diamond Shoals lightship, stationed off Cape Hatteras, N. C., was caught in the center of the tropical hurricane of September 1933, and was forced off its station notwithstanding its 5,500-pound anchor and 12 tons of anchor chain. The vessel dragged into the edge of the dangerous Diamond Shoal. but was gotten off again. President Roosevelt sent the officers and crew of the Diamond Shoals lightship a letter of commendation and appreciation for the heroic work done by them.

Volumes could be written of the heroic vigil and daring service of all engaged in this work whether on lightships, lighthouses, tenders, or any other branch. Sometimes their stations are destroyed by ice, and sometimes they become havens of refuge, as in June 1916 when 155 persons from the wrecked steamer Bear were taken aboard Blunts Reef lightship California, and cared for until taken off, or as in October 1916, when South Pass lighthouse gave shelter in the rooms of the tower to 75 people throughout the night of the hurricane, or as at Ocracoke, N. C., when 27 persons took refuge in the light tower when their dwellings were destroyed in the storm of September 1933.

It has been well said that the lightkeeper "stands his vigil for all humanity, asking no questions as to the nationality or purpose of him whom he directs to safety."

We are likely to forget the part played by the Lighthouse Service in time of war. It has cooperated in all wars and national emergencies with the military and naval forces of the United States.

The perils to lightships and their crews are illustrated by the case of the lightship No. 117 occupying the Nantucket Shoals station with which the steamship Olympic collided on May 15, 1934, in a dense fcg. The lightship sank on station with a loss of 7 members of its crew. Boats from the Olympic were immediately put over and 7 of the 11 officers and crew who were aboard the lightship were picked up, but 3 of these died the same day of injuries.

The public generally should know more of the great work of the Lighthouse Service, and it is eminently fitting and proper that the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of this great Service should be celebrated throughout the United States and in all of its Territories and possessions.

It is with distinct sorrow that I recall that this, the one hundred and fiftieth year of the establishment and beginning of the work of the Lighthouse Service under the Federal Government, will see that Service lose its identity. It was with the ninth law of the first session of the First Congress of the United States that the Lighthouse Service began, and it is to be regretted that the one hundred and fiftieth year of its birth should see its death. I am not raising any criticism. I regret the action. I do not believe there will be any economy. I believe that the Bureau would have functioned just as efficiently and just as economically in the way it has functioned in the past. However, that is now only a moot question. I do want to call the attention of the Members to the splendid, noble, patient, and patriotic service that has been rendered by these men who along the coast have kept the lights burning that vessels, passengers, and crews might escape danger. They have kept the lights burning. The Service, as a distinct organization, may pass out, but they have established for themselves a record that can never die.

May I cite only one other instance of their extreme courage and bravery on the Massachusetts coast last year. A lighthouse operator was washed out to sea. His wife was living with him. She immediately attempted to row out and rescue him. He swam back and was saved, but only in time to see her perish in the waves. He turned to his lights, and those lights kept flashing through the night. He never left his post.

The record of that Service for years will tell the story of sacrifice and of danger and of unsurpassed heroism. They have not been before the public, but they have always been true. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn. The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cooley, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called reciprocal trade agreement amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, following line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows: "Salaries, reciprocal-trade agreements: For personal services in carrying out the reciprocal trade agreements program, $225,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were-ayes 91, noes 74.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just counted the membership present in the Chamber. One hundred and sixty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 165, nays 139, not voting 126, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAWKS. Yes. The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hawks moves to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendment: At the end of the bill insert a new paragraph, as follows: "No part of the funds appropriated in this bill shall be used for the purpose of purchasing any foreign dairy or other competitive foreign agricultural products which are not produced in the United States in sufficient quantities to meet domestic needs." States in sufficient quantities to meet domestic needs.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit is not in order in that it is an attempt to place legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a limitation on appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina

The point of order has been made that the motion to recommit is not in order because of the fact that it sets up matters of legislation in an appropriation bill. The Chair has tried carefully to read the provisions of the motion. On a fair reading and construction of the whole motion it appears that there is nothing affirmative in the motion in the way of legislation. It appears to the Chair on the whole to be a restriction or a limitation upon the expenditure of funds.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May the motion again be I think there was an error in it.

The SPEAKER. It may be read by unanimous consent.

Is there objection to the reading of the motion?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. May I inquire whether the apparent inaccuracy or error to which attention was called by the gentleman from South Dakota has been corrected? There was a double negative in there as I heard the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter within the control of the Chair, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, some of us are under the impression that the wording of the amendment as it is on the Clerk's desk is not in the form in which it was read. May I ask as a parliamentary inquiry whether the amendment upon which we will vote is as it was read to the House or if the words "may not be" are changed to "can"?

The SPEAKER. There is no amendment pending before the House.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I refer to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit has been reduced to writing and has been read from the Clerk's desk. It speaks for itself.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 113, nays 167, answered "present" 19, not voting 131, as follows:

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Thomas S. McMillan]?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman be able to indicate to us the subject which is to be covered in his remarks?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I expect to speak on the bill just passed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, after the roll call on the motion to recommit, will the gentleman permit the Members of the House to have the amendment reported so that we may know at this time what the amendment was?

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. That is entirely beyond my control or jurisdiction.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I take the opportunity to state to the gentleman that the Record will show I declined to vote upon this motion to recommit. The reason I did not vote is obvious. There was a mistake or error in the amendment which made it absurd.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Thomas S. McMillan]? There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, we have just seen here this afternoon a very unusual performance. Throughout the day, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from time to time from our Republican brethren and the lofty advice and wisdom that they have presented to us in connection with the consideration of this bill. To climax this great effort, this glorious performance, we find here now a most unusual result in the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. Speaker, of course I will pay my respects to our new friend and Member from Wisconsin who offered the motion a moment ago. He is new and will be coming along, and we hope he will improve with age as his service in the House is extended.

The vote just taken is interesting. In order, however, that we may know exactly what we voted on, I want to read again the language of this motion. I quote:

No part of the funds appropriated in this bill shall be used for the purpose of purchasing any foreign dairy or other competitive foreign agricultural products which are not produced in the United States in sufficient quantities to meet domestic needs.

Oh, so many nots, nots, nots and nots. There are all the negatives I ever heard of expressed in this motion.

What provokes me or, rather I should say, what gives me a great deal of concern is the fact that there were 113 of our Republican colleagues who voted for that sort of language which means absolutely nothing.

Mr. SHORT rose.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. There were 19 of our Republican friends, I may say, only 19 like our friend, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mort] who is now on his feet—19 gentlemen over there who did catch the significance of the language proposed. It shows there is still a little intelligence yet left over there, but just a little.

I think for the RECORD it is well to call the situation to the attention of the Members of the House. Let us all hope that later on we will see at least a little more intelligence displayed on the part of our Republican friends to carry on in a more statesmanlike and dependable manner. If this is a fair sample of legislation we are to get from our Republican brethren may the good Lord help us. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker [applause], I am glad to see from the applause that there is more sportsmanship in evidence now than there was in the last speech. [Applause.] One would think from the talk of my good friend from South Carolina that he never made a mistake.

The facts are we have had an unusual situation here this afternoon. For the first time in years, when a Member of this House demanded to know what the motion to recommit was, it was not permitted to be read a second time so the House could have the information. [Applause.] I am sure orderly parliamentary procedure and good sportsmanship would have permitted the motion to be again presented to the House so everyone would have known exactly the text of the motion.

I will say, however, every Member who voted "yea" was voting for a principle. He was voting to lay down in this House a principle to the effect we would not make foreign purchases when there were American goods to be obtained. That was the real issue. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short observation?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I must decline to yield. I may say to my brethren on both sides of the House, and I say this in good spirit, that things have come to a great pass when a technical construction of a motion is all the Democrats have to rejoice about. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am unalterably and unequivocally opposed to the use of Government money for the purchase of foreign farm or other products when the products of our own country are obtainable. Had this motion to recommit been clear in expressing that purpose, I would have voted "yea." Because it was not clear in stating that purpose, I answered "present." I believe this statement expresses the sentiments of every other Member who answered "present." At the same time, all of us who have watched these proceedings know that every person who voted "yea" likewise desired to express himself in favor of the purchase of domestic, instead of foreign, products.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so may I state that I was a Member of this House for 12 years when the Republicans were writing the legislation, and, having as long a memory as that, I am somewhat surprised at the motion to recommit that was offered this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HON. HAROLD L. ICKES LOGICAL CHOICE FOR NEW WORKS POST

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, recent press releases refer to a campaign to draft Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes to head the newly organized Federal Works Agency. I do not know where the campaign originated, but I agree most emphatically that the appointment would be a logical one, having personally known him for more than 30 years. I hope the President can persuade Mr. Ickes to accept the post.

Some of these dispatches from the press contend that if Mr. Ickes is appointed head of the works unit he would be required to retire immediately from the Cabinet. There seems to be no real reason for this contention. There is nothing in the Reorganization Act which would prohibit a Cabinet official from administering the works program. Mr. Ickes has successfully launched past public-works programs, and this almost superhuman task interfered in no way with the efficient administration of his Interior duties.

The gentlemen of the press have nicknamed him "Honest Harold," and since members of the fourth estate rarely bestow complimentary appellations on public officials, it is to be assumed the title is no phony.

The billions of dollars of public money to be spent in the next 12 months by the P. W. A., W. P. A., Procurement, Housing, and Public Roads must be handled by a man whose reputation as a public official and administrative ability is of the highest degree, "Honest Harold's" record speaks for itself. In addition to launching the billion-dollar public-works program and running the Interior Department, he has administered the petroleum law with such success that this industry is in better shape today than ever before.

Undoubtedly government will remain in the field of public works for some time, and it is quite probable a permanent agency will be established to undertake the planning of worthwhile public improvements on a long-range basis. Government housing subsidies may also continue for some time. The relief problem is another function of the new works agency, and it is imperative that this matter be dealt with in an honest and fair manner. All of this means that the new agency will occupy an important place in government and emphasizes the importance of selecting as administrator a man who will not surrender to any political pressure.

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who has been wont to air public differences with the Secretary in his daily column, recently lauded the President's move in placing administration of the Coal Act under Mr. Ickes. He refers to his erstwhile enemy as "the best public administrator for this kind of system that could be selected." I am quoting the editorial here in full, since it presents a fair picture of the Cabinet official by one who can in no manner be described as a partisan admirer:

LAUDS TRANSFER OF COAL CONTROL—DECLARES ROOSEVELT "100 PER-CENT RIGHT" IN GUFFY ACT MOVE

(By Hugh S. Johnson)

Washington.—The President's transfer of administration of the Guffey Act from the Bituminous Coal Commission to the Interior Department is 100 percent right. That this stricken industry can be put in a position to earn reasonable profits and afford reasonable employment and compensation was proved beyond peradventure of doubt by the coal code. That went into effect within 60 days after the problem was tackled and in a situation which, 9 months earlier, had been the most chaotic and hopeless in our economy.

had been the most chaotic and hopeless in our economy.

The Bituminous Coal Commission has been so ridden by politics and incompetency that, with much clearer powers, it has never been able to reproduce a similar result along a well-charted path.

Honest Harold Ickes and this writer have had their very vocal public differences, notwithstanding a genuine private personal mutual respect, perhaps approaching affectionate regard. I don't want to appear to be reneging on any stand I have taken in this too-much publicized feud, but I do owe it to candor and fairness to say that I think he is the best public administrator for this kind of system that could be selected.

BUREAU OF MINES GOOD ORGANIZATION

I negotiated the petroleum code, but he administered it. His department was much better equipped for that kind of job than anything we had in N. R. A. I asked him to take over the administration of the coal code also. But he was too canny. The Bureau of Mines is one of the best technical organizations in all government. It just wasn't good sense not to put that problem there at the outset.

Honest Harold is supposed to be by business an intimate of dragons and a companion of owls. From my observations, he is the most practical administrator in the whole New Deal. I think the petroleum industry will bear that out and I believe that the coal industry will find it so.

Surely he is suspicious. He sees in corners ghosts of gents with little black bags who formerly haunted those halls. But Harold understands the two-three-fours of business. He won't go to sleep with his thumb in anybody's mouth. But he doesn't expect bricks to be made without straw. If I were in the coal business I would be willing to trust my case with him, especially in view of the proved efficiency of the Bureau of Mines.

Except for the code period and a short time during the British coal strike, that industry on the average hasn't made any profits since the World War. Approximately 400,000 miners, breadwinners for 1,500,000 people, are peculiarly dependent on this business for support. Furthermore, it is an industry that simply must be preserved. It is our essential reserve for fuel, solid or liquid, after our petroleum is exhausted.

ROOSEVELT ACT WAS NECESSARY

Its present situation in competition with gas, oil, and hydroelectric power is one that absolutely requires artificial support from the Government, even to the extent of outright price-fixing and an unusual degree of cooperation among capital, labor, and government.

Critics of John Lewis can find plenty of pegs on which to hang an argument in other activities of C. I. O., but an honest appraisal will find few in his conduct of labor relations in coal mining. Most honest coal operators will concede that. He has done more to keep that industry on a livable basis than any mine owner in the business.

The President's intervention in the recent coal labor negotiations reveals him at his best. He knows that industry better than any other. His action was in no sense political and it is unfair to suggest that it was taken in favor of one side or the other of the feud between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. It was absolutely necessary in the national interest.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Thomas S. McMillan] in calling attention to the procedure a little while ago, said that he hoped somebody would grow up and then learn not to make mistakes. I call attention to the fact that the author of the bill himself this afternoon included a provision to pay salaries to people who were engaged in making reciprocal-trade treaties, for which there is no authority of law, and obligingly changes the word "treaties" to "agreements" this afternoon without objection.

EXPLANATION

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the motion to recommit and my vote thereon, I do not believe it necessary for me to advise the Members of the House, who are familiar with my record, that I am definitely opposed to the importation of foreign agricultural products which compete with American farmers. I have many times stated that we can never solve the farm problem if we permit our domestic markets to be flooded with foreign products. Why ask the American farmer to limit his acreage and then permit foreign products to be sold in the American market? It does not make sense, and our farmers know it.

That being my unequivocal position, I certainly cannot approve the use of any Government money-not even a dime of it; not a single cent-to purchase farm products from foreign countries where the same products are produced in the United States in sufficient quantities to meet domestic needs. That would amount to taxing the American people, even the farmer himself, to obtain money to buy goods to compete with their goods.

My first impression of the motion to recommit this bill, made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS], was that it would carry out the very thing I much desire-prevent any Government money being used to purchase foreign dairy and agricultural products that are produced in the United States in sufficient quantities to meet domestic needs. For that reason I voted "yea." But upon a more careful reading of the motion I found that it was not clear and would not accomplish the purpose. For that reason I changed my vote from "yea" to "present." I very much regret that the language of the motion was not clear in its purpose.

And so, Mr. Speaker, in order that I may be recorded as favoring the spirit of the motion and the purpose in the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks], I voted "vea." I changed the vote to "present" in order that I may also be recorded as believing the language employed did not carry out the admirable purpose.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are no farmers anywhere who excel the American farmers and there are no agricultural products produced anywhere that excel our American

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of my vote "present" on the last roll call, as in the case of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kunkel], I am opposed to the importation of foreign competitive farm products in competition with products raised in America, and would have so voted had I been given an opportunity on the last roll call.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I alluded to some figures by Col. Millard Brown. I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a letter from Mr. A. F. Walker, secretary-treasurer, Rhode Island Textile Association, to Colonel Brown.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include an article appearing in The Protectionist.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

EXPLANATION

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we are now considering a principle that means much to the future of agriculture in America, and, consequently, to the future prosperity of the American people. Under the free-trade policy of the New Deal, erroneously denominated "reciprocal-trade agreements," we are day by day seeing the American market—the best market in the world-taken from the American farmer and turned over to foreign countries, with their cheap labor and low standards of living.

It would be a wonderful thing, Mr. Speaker, if we could so uplift all of the peoples of the world that they might, too, enjoy the standard of living to which we believe the American people are entitled. However, Mr. Speaker, I, for one, do not believe that this should be attempted at the expense of the American workingman, the American farmer, and the American businessman. Why restrict immigration if we are to open the floodgates of our ports to the produce produced by cheap labor of the Old World?

The appalling economic confusion and uncertainty attending this strange legislation makes it perfectly clear that we are being driven in the wrong direction. The Constitution demands that Congress perform the duty of regulating imports and exports. Congress has no right to give away or delegate this duty or authority to any President, New Deal or otherwise, and it is high time that Congress should reassert its duty in this respect.

Our domestic market, which rightfully belongs to the American farmer and to the American workingman, has been given to foreign producers. During the past 6 years, while the farmers of the United States have been persuaded to restrict general farm production, foreign farmers have been literally invited to produce farm commodities for America. These farm imports, valued at millions of dollars, displace domestic farm land, and have brought a glutted market with falling prices and distress to American agriculture.

In addition to the loss of our home market and the money it would have meant to American farmers, several millions of our unemployed would have work in this country if our domestic market had received proper protection during this time. I believe that when prosperity returns to the American farmer, it will come from the American market. And we can expect no real prosperity in America until the American farmer and the American workingman can work at real jobs at real wages.

Mr. Speaker, I am wholly in disagreement with the attempt of the administration to buy canned meat from the Argentine with which to feed American soldiers and sailors. Of course, domestic meat costs more, principally because in the higher price of our domestic product there is represented the American home, the automobile, the education of one's children, and those other priceless privileges that go to make up the standards of living that we enjoy. If we are to maintain that standard of living, we must recognize this fact, and I submit that it is most unfortunate that those high in our Government should drive the opening wedge that, if ever carried to its conclusion, would break down this standard.

Mr. Speaker, on the motion to recommit, which was just considered, I voted "present." I did this because of the ambiguity of its language and the uncertainty attending its construction. This motion was read but once and the request that it be read again was denied. It was impossible to secure the copy of the motion for personal examination. Had this motion been in the form that would have prohibited the use of the money herein appropriated for the purchase of foreign agricultural products in competition with domestic production. I would have voted "aye." It is not encouraging for the future of the American farmer and for the future prosperity of America to have observed the most unusual tactics of the majority on the floor of this House this afternoon endeavoring to defeat an adequate prohibition in this bill that would have given renewed assurance and some encouragement to the American farmer, the American laborer, and the American businessman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include in the RECORD a report from Colonel Harrington, showing the amount of W. P. A. money, C. W. A. money, and direct relief money that has been paid to various States of the Union; also accompanied by another chart from Colonel Harrington that shows the total amount paid to each State.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

EXPLANATION

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, on the last roll call I voted "present." In explanation of that vote I want to reiterate what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kunkel], stated. If this motion to recommit had been without any ambiguity, directing that no purchases of foreign products could be made when domestic products were available of the type mentioned, I would have voted in favor of the motion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I certainly believe it is possible for us to have reciprocal-trade agreements to the mutual benefit of this country and those with whom we trade, without at the same time doing harm to our farmers or industrialists. I voted "present" on the latest roll call because the language of the amendment was not clear. I not only object to importing from other countries that which we produce on our farms, but I object equally to importing from other countries manufactured articles in competition with our own made by cheap labor and American capital abroad.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the Committee by including an editorial from the Sioux City Journal.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1939

(Legislative day of Friday, May 19, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast laid the foundations of the earth when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy: Reveal to each one of us, as we bow before Thee, the promise and miracle of morning as it holds within its joyous heart every possibility of high achievement, every opportunity for serving Thee with a high and cheerful courage, with a gratitude born of the immortal bloom of gladness, that our work this day may be crowned with blessings abounding on our beloved country.

Make us to dwell with Thee in Thy secret place, O Thou Most High; let it be not an occasional refuge but an abiding habitation where complacency cannot endure Thine eyes of holy love and where the soul is secure against all distracting influences as it is anointed by Thy Spirit's breath on the mountaintop of the hidden life. We ask it in our Saviour's name and for His sake. Amen,

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT-AMENDMENTS

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes. Accompanying the amendment is a brief statement which I should like to have printed in the RECORD along with the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment of Mr. MILLER was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend section 30 of Senate bill No. 2009, page 120, under the heading "Rate-Making Rule", so that said section when amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 30. It shall be the duty of the Commission in the exercise "SEC. 30. It shall be the duty of the Commission in the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates, to give due consideration among other factors, to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient transportation service by such carrier or carriers at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable such carrier or carriers under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service. When used in this section the term "rates" means rates, fares, and charges, and all regulations and practices relating thereto. In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the relating thereto. In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier or carriers to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered. It shall be unlawful to establish rates for any type of transportation which shall not be compensatory, as herein defined, whether such rates are established to meet competition of other types of transportation or for other purposes." petition of other types of transportation or for other purposes.

The statement presented by Mr. MILLER is as follows:

I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed to section 30, pages 120 and 121 of the bill, S. 2009. My purpose in presenting this amendment is to give security to the shippers and the public who pay the freight bill. As presented to the Senate this is a carriers' bill. As drawn it is designed to promote the interests of the rail carriers. It involves carriers by truck, by bus, by pipe lines, and by water lines, though it is of doubtful benefit to any of them.

doubtful benefit to any of them.

This bill was designed by the President's Committee. That committee consisted of six members, three from the railway brotherhoods and three railway executives. The success of the railroads was their sole objective. There was no one on that committee to represent the producing and consuming public. In other words, there was no one there to look out for the interests of the great mass of people who pay the freight bills.

My purpose in offering this amendment is to make provision for safeguarding the interests of the man who pays the freight. It is an amendment to clarify and make certain, in the public interest, the rate-making rule which the bill now contains. Its purpose is to guarantee to the shipper the economy of each form or transportation without reference to the cost of any other form of transportation.

AMENDMENT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, sometime in the near future the Senate will receive the House report on the so-called Byrnes bill, which is already on the Senate Calendar. In anticipation of that report I should like to present briefly a few facts relating to an amendment which I intend to propose to the Social Security Act.

One portion of the Byrnes bill will virtually tear to shreds the "experience rating" unemployment provisions in the Wisconsin Unemployment Compensation Act.

There are 32 States whose law provides a definite incentive to employers to maintain stable employment. There are 6 States in addition to Wisconsin that have the so-called "individual employer reserve" type of law. The others in this group of 32 States have what is known as the "pooled fund with automatic experience rating." The general idea behind both of these plans is to provide a lower unemployment contribution rate where there is a low rate of unemployment. We might compare this to the automobile insurance company which collects a smaller premium from the man who over a period of years has had few or no accidents.

The Unemployment Reserves and Compensation Act in Wisconsin became law on January 29, 1932. Wisconsin, on November 27, 1935, was the first State to have its unemployment compensation law approved under the Federal Social Security Act. The benefit rights of most of our workers began to build up on July 1, 1936. On August 17 of that year our industrial commission paid to a Wisconsin worker the first unemployment benefit check ever paid in America from a State unemployment compensation fund.

Under the provisions of the Wisconsin law, Wisconsin employers contribute to separate accounts in the State unemployment reserve fund maintained for them and their employees by the State industrial commission. The experience rating system means that each employer's contribution rate will depend on his own experience or record. In Wisconsin by the close of 1938 more than 1,500 employers had their rate reduced. Other employers with a bad experience record paid an increased rate.

That plan, by the way, was enacted in 1932 by a group that included the State industrial commission and leading employer and labor representatives.

By the end of last year over eleven and one-half million dollars had been paid in benefits under the Wisconsin law to more than 200,000 workers who had been partially or totally unemployed sometime between August 1936 and December 1938. In 1938 about 10,000 employers and 450,000 workers were covered by the Wisconsin law. At the close of last year the net balance of the Wisconsin unemployment reserve was more than $38,000,000.

I do not believe that the Byrnes bill should scrap any State provision for experience rating where employers with good unemployment records pay less.

It is apparent that the individual employer will work to reduce unemployment when he has this incentive. He will slice the seasonal zigzags from his employment chart and spread his employment evenly throughout the year.

Throwing the experience rating State provision into the discard means that we are one step nearer to a complete and undesirable nationalization of the present State programs. It means that we are snatching the unemployment insurance from the hands of the unemployed and replacing it with something that looks suspiciously like a dole. It means that we are beginning to open the floodgates of unemployment funds with every possibility for a haphazard benefit-payment system. It means that we are setting the stage for whooping up the contribution rates for the accumulation of huge reserves.

It means that we will rob the employer of a great incentive to eliminate unemployment. It means that we are literally "opening our arms" to embrace a system which offers no incentive to eliminate the harrowing discouragement of seasonal lay-offs.

Mr. President, I ask consent to submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received for appropriate disposition,

The amendment submitted by Mr. WILEY intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2203) to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL WELCOME TO THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN OF GREAT BRITAIN

That a joint committee consisting of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized to make the necessary arrangements for carrying out the purpose of this concurrent resolution.

REAR ADMIRAL HARRY A. STUART—RECONSIDERATION OF NOMINATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I must leave the Chamber immediately to attend a committee meeting. As in executive session I should like to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the nomination of Harry A. Stuart to be rear admiral was confirmed. Personally I favor the confirmation. However, one of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs who is not present at the moment desires to be present when the nomination is acted upon. I therefore enter the motion in his behalf.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE-LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on May 16, the President of the United States addressed a letter to the chairman of the Temporary National Economic Committee. The letter deals with the present phase of the committee's hearings, namely, savings and investments and their use. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE WHITE HOUSE Washington, May 16, 1939.

Hon. Joseph C. O'MAHONEY,

Chairman, Temporary National Economic Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOE: In my message to the Congress initiating the work of

DEAR JOE: In my message to the Congress initiating the work of the Temporary National Economic Committee I had occasion to say that "idle factories and idle workers profit no man." It may equally be said that idle dollars profit no man. The present phase of the hearings before the committee bear directly upon this problem.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the dollars which the American people save each year are not yet finding their way back into productive enterprise in sufficient volume to keep our economic machine turning over at the rate required to bring about full employment. We have mastered the technique of creating necessary machine turning over at the rate required to bring about full employment. We have mastered the technique of creating necessary credit; we have now to deal with the problem of assuring its full use. In the series of hearings which the Securities and Exchange Commission is to hold before your committee, I take it that a major problem of your committee will be to ascertain why a large part of our vast reservoir of money and savings have remained idle in stagnant pools.

Is it because our economy is leaving an era of rapid expansion and entering an era of steadier growth, calling for relatively less investment in capital goods?

Is it because of lag, leak, and friction in the operation of investment markets which pervert the normal flow of savings into nonproductive enterprise?

These are questions for your committee to answer.

I know of no more urgent one in the country today.

I know of no more urgent one in the country today.

The hearings before your committee, I hope, will assume the task of analyzing the financial machine in its relation to the creation of more needed wealth. We know that the mechanism can be improved. Improvement can only be made on a basis of clear analysis. Having made that analysis, I hope that your committee will then be able to indicate ways by which the machine may be made to function more efficiently.

We have an immense amount of wealth which needs to be created in this country. Much of it can be created through private enter-prise. Some of it can properly be created through quasi-public agencies. The problem is to use our added savings and increased agencies. The problem is to use our added savings and increased credit to get this wealth moving—that is, to get it now in productive enterprise—and, at the same time, to make savings available for use in all categories of private enterprise, as well as for the great and recognized enterprises which can command capital, but have less actual need of capital than many smaller but equally deserving enterprises. There is also the problem of determining how credit can best be made available for instrumentalities of local government and for those quasi-public enterprises which must do the work which capped be done by private enterprise which cannot be done by private enterprise.

We have developed several methods of connecting money with men and materials so as to get useful work done. We shall need to use all of these opportunities, or, if you choose to put it differently, we must meet all of the demands made on our system, if we are to have lasting prosperity. It is our task to find and energetically adopt those specific measures which will bring together idle men, machines, and money. In proportion as we succeed, we shall strengthen the structure of democratic economy.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In this connection I desire to call the attention of readers of the Congressional Record to the fact that parts I and II of the hearings of the committee have now been printed by the Government Printing Office and are ready for distribution. There has been a great demand for copies of the hearings. Part I of the hearings is available at the Government Printing Office from the Superintendent of Documents at 25 cents a copy. The price has not been fixed on part II. Part II deals with the hearing upon pat-However, I am sure that a very reasonable price will be fixed upon that part of the hearings. The number of free copies made available to the committee is so small that free distribution is not adequate to supply the demand, and I am taking advantage of the opportunity to advise those who may be interested that copies may be obtained in the manner indicated.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5427, making appropriations for the Department of Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the first amendment, found on pages 2 and 3, is exactly the same provision which appears in all the other appropriation bills. It merely refers to the average of the grade in the payment of employees, and it also contains a provision by which five employees now detailed to the office of the Secretary from the United States Employment Service may be continued in that employment without competitive examination.

No other explanation of the bill is really necessary. There are practically no differences between the bill as reported by the Senate committee and the bill as passed by the House, except a few miscellaneous increases, amounting to $212,000. Those are the only increases made in the bill; and, so far as I know, there were practically no differences of opinion on the part of the committee in reference to the various matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Department of Labor-Office of the Secretary", on page 2, line 9, after the word "examinations", to insert a colon and the following additional provisos:

Provided further, That persons (not exceeding five in number) now detailed to the Office of the Secretary from the United States Employment Service may be continued in the Office of the Secretary and paid from the amount herein appropriated without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws requiring competitive examinations: Provided further, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the Assistant Secretary and the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: And provided further, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different burcau, office, or other appropriation unit, or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated, in a grade in which only one position is allocated,

So as to read:

Salaries: Secretary of Labor, Assistant Secretary, Second Assistant Secretary, and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $391,680: Provided, That persons (not exceeding 10 in number) now employed in the determination of wages pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings," approved August 30, 1935, may be continued in such employment and paid from the amount herein appropriated without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws requiring competitive examinations: Provided further, That persons (not exceeding five in number) now detailed to the Office of the Secretary from the United States Employment Service may be continued in the office of the Secretary and paid from the amount herein appropriated without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws requiring competitive examinations: Provided further, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the Assistant Secretary and the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: And provided further, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximu

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor", on page 4, line 4, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,800"; in line 13, after the word "periodicals", to strike out "teletype service and tolls (not to exceed $900)"; in line 18, after the word "services", to insert "teletype service and tolls (not to exceed $900)"; and in line 23, after the words "in all", to strike out "$250,120" and insert "$233,620", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is before the Senate and still open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGULATION OF MODES OF TRANSPORTATION

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2009.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator from Montana to make the usual request to have committee amendments first considered?

Mr. WHEELER. It is.

Mr. McNARY. Then is it the purpose of the Senator to discuss the bill in all its details?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, with reference to the notice given by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] last Thursday or Friday of a motion to have this bill referred to the Committee on Commerce for special purposes, and especially with a view to the consideration of its effect upon water transportation, I desire to say that I am not going to press consideration of that motion now because I have an engagement to make a short speech. I believe it will be just as well to have the motion go over until tomorrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the motion which the Senator intends to make come before the consideration of the bill or after its consideration?

Mr. BAILEY. I take it that the motion will be brought up tomorrow or this afternoon, if possible.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "transportation", to insert "subject to the provisions of this act", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, including both part I and part II thereof, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"Section 1. It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions established through collective bargaining; all to the end of insuring the development and preservation of a national transportation system adequate at all times to meet most economically and efficiently the full needs of the national defense.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Montana was going to explain the bill in full. I suggest that he do that before we pass on the amendments.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well, Mr. President. In view of the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Nebraska, I withdraw my request to act on the committee amendments at this time, and I shall proceed to explain the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is withdrawn.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, last year the President of the United States, recognizing the financial condition of the railroads of the country, called together a committee composed of three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Secretary of the Treasury, representatives of the R. F. C. and the S. E. C., and members of the Interstate Commerce Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Following that meeting, the President appointed a committee of three, which made recommendations to the President which were forwarded to the Congress of the United States. The recommendations were not acted upon at that time because it was so late in the session. Then the President appointed another committee, a committee of six, consisting of three railroad executives and three representatives of the railroad employees of the country. They made their report to the President of the United States, and a copy of that report is on the desk of every Member of the Senate.

After the report was made the President asked me to work out and introduce legislation to carry out the provisions of the report. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and I introduced in the Senate a bill which did not include all of the recommendations of the Committee of Six. In fact, we found that the Committee of Six had made some recommendations with which we were not in sympathy, and we did not introduce them in the form of legislation. did work out a bill which we introduced, and then we held hearings before the full Committee on Interstate Commerce. Every shipper, every representative of the carriers, and everybody else who wanted to be heard was heard before the committee. The hearings lasted for something like 2 weeks, and they have now been printed. We called before us persons from the Interstate Commerce Commission and from other bureaus; and after that, as chairman of the committee, I appointed a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and myself. We then took up each and every objection which had been made to the bill in the committee. Not only did we take up every objection which was made to the bill in the committee hearings, but we likewise took up every letter that was written suggesting amendments or changes; and we spent something like 2 months—meeting practically every morning and nearly every afternoon-hearing each and every one of these persons over again, and trying to work out provisions which would be fair to everyone concerned.

The bill as we present it here today is not a panacea for all the ills of the railroads of the country, nor is it a panacea for the bus and truck people, nor is it a panacea for the shipping people. When the bill was first introduced, the bus and truck people immediately sent their representatives before the committee, and they complained about certain provisions of the legislation. Today, however, I may say that the bus and truck people of the country, as represented through their organizations, have notified me that they have no objections to this measure.

The water carriers appeared before the committee. Some of them were in favor of the bill and some were opposed to it. But it is significant that General Ashburn, the president of the Inland Waterways Co., owned by the Government of the United States, appeared before the committee and testified in favor of the bill. Likewise, Mr. Ames, who also is the head of one of the other three largest water carriers on the Mississippi River, appeared before the committee in favor of the bill. I believe one of the other water carriers did not appear, and did not express any opinion one way or the other. Mr. Narelle, one of the large shippers, also appeared before the committee and stated that he was in favor of the regulation.

I might say, with reference to the water carrier bill, that in 1935 the President of the United States sent a message to the Congress in which he said:

Another bill for the regulation of intercoastal and coastwise trade and of some of the inland waterway carriers prepared by the Coordinator has been introduced and is before the Congress for action. I recommend that this bill be considered by the appropriate committees and pressed to early passage. I can see no reason why the responsibility for the regulation of intercoastal, coastwise, and inland waterways should not be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, with proper provision for the departmentalizing of the work of the Commission.

I believe it is safe to say that domestic common carriers by water, other than those who are industrial affiliates, or in some way subsidized, favor the regulation of water carriers.

At that time I introduced a bill which had been drafted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we held long hearings upon that particular measure. Some of the water carriers expressed themselves as in favor of the proposed regulation at that time. A few of them came and opposed regulation; they did not want regulation of any kind or character. The bill was reported out of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and was brought to the floor of the Senate. About the same time the late Senator from New York, Senator Copeland, introduced a bill creating the Maritime Commission, and that became a law. It vested in the Maritime Commission the regulation of some of the rates of the shipping industry now provided for in the pending bill.

I call attention to the fact that in the bill that was passed it was provided that the President of the United States could, within 2 years, by Executive order, transfer all of the regulatory provisions with reference to rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission if he so desired. Instead of just transferring the provisions, as the law provded—and that was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate—in order to set up the authority in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to make the law applicable to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as it should be, we wrote regulatory provisions into the pending bill.

I wish to call specifically to the attention of the Senate the provision of the bill with reference to the policy outlined, because I think it is extremely important that the policy provision should be understood.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator enters upon a discussion of the policy provision of the bill, I wish he would tell the Senate to what extent the law providing for a Maritime Commission is affected by the pending bill; and also tell the Senate—and I have only a very indefinite idea of this—to what extent the so-called interstate water carriers, the river carriers particularly, are organized. The Senator said they appeared before the committee. Do they have an organization which represents all of them, or are they in a rather disorganized state?

Mr. WHEELER. I think they are in a rather disorganized condition. There are three large groups which are interested in Mississippi waterway thipping. There is the Inland Waterways Co., the Mississippi Valley Barge Line, and the American Barge Line. Two of those appeared before the committee and testified in favor of the pending bill.

With reference to the Maritime Commission and their duties, in the first place, the Commission owns and runs ships. Secondly, they subsidize ships. Thirdly, they attempt to regulate the rates of shipping. Some of the water carriers have come to me and complained that the Maritime Commission is in an untenable position, for the reason that when the water carriers go to the Commission and submit their rates, they appear before a commission which not only runs ships but is seeking to regulate the rates of its competitors. In addition, they are subsidizing other shipping companies, and while they are subsidizing other ships they are also regulating the rates of the competitors of the ships they subsidize. I say to the Senate that that is an untenable position.

All we seek to do by the pending bill is to regulate all forms of transportation in exactly the same way—water carriers, railroads, and busses and trucks. When the bus and truck bill came before the committee—and it had been pending before the Committee on Interstate Commerce for 10 years prior to the time we passed it—the bus and truck people came before the committee and said, "If you pass this bill the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to legislate us out of business. They are going to raise our rates, and raise them to such an extent, and in the interest of the railroads of this country, that they are going to put us out of business to the benefit of the railroads."

Today scarcely a bus or truck carrier in the country can be found which would want to see the law repealed. Every one of them says that the Interstate Commerce Commission is doing a fair and impartial job. Some of the railroads have complained that the Interstate Commerce Commission has leaned clear over to the busses and trucks and is not giving the railroads a fair deal. On the other hand, a few bus and truck carriers say the Commission is giving the railroads too good a deal. Broadly speaking, there is general satisfaction on the part of the bus and truck people and on the part of the railroads with reference to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Senators have heard the statement that the railroads of the country are in a strait jacket. We have seen great advertisements and propaganda put out by the railroads to the effect that they are in a strait jacket, and that they have not anything to say with reference to how they run the railroads. During the hearing I said to the representatives of the railroads, "Suppose I should introduce a bill to repeal the Interstate Commerce Act." They said, "We would not want that." I said, "Suppose we should repeal the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act providing for regulation of the rates of the railroads of this country?" They said, "We would not want that." They said, "If you did that, there would be such cutthroat competition between the various railroads that it would utterly ruin the railroads of the country."

The shipping industry has not come to us with any definite statement that one provision is particularly bad or another provision is particularly good. When they came to us and presented arguments which were in the interest of fair play, and which could be justified, and which were approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the experts of the Maritime Commission, we included all provisions embodying their views.

The truth is that some of the water carriers do not want to be regulated at all. I do not know that I particularly blame them. Some object to regulation. Some say that it is not the thing to do, that we should not regulate them at all. Our country is committed to regulation, and if it is committed to regulation of the railroads and to the regulation of trucks and busses, then what excuse can there be for not regulating competing forms of transportation?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with everything the Senator has stated about regulation of water carriers generally, but it seems to me that when there is such a situation that American water carriers are in competition with foreign carriers, as is the case on the Great Lakes, where the grain trade, and the iron-ore trade, and the coal trade, and the limestone trade, are handled in both Canadian and American vessels, there should not be regulation of American shipping when the United States cannot in any way affect the Canadian shipping.

I realize that the committee put an amendment in the bill which the Senator feels has taken care of that situation. I have read it with care, and I should like to have some consideration given by the Senator from Montana and other Senators who are experts on the subject to this question. As I understand the amendment, all bulk carriers on the Great Lakes are exempted from the provisions of the bill-exempted from regulation—unless a common carrier competes with them. I will refer to the situation on the Great Lakes. The Senator from Montana doubtless remembers the line known as the Great Lakes Transit Corporation, formerly known as the Anchor Line. They are carriers of package freight on fresh water. They engage in the carrying of package freight during practically all the sailing season. But they can and do engage in the grain-carrying business. If they do that, as they have done in the past and as they may do in the future, then as a common carrier they would be competing with the bulk carriers, and if that situation arose the exemption which the Senator's amendment provides would not apply. It would be eliminated because the bulk carriers would then be in competition for a time with a common carrier.

I have prepared a simple amendment which I should like to submit to the Senator for his consideration. I think my amendment will cover that situation. Everyone, including Commissioner Eastman, the chairman of the special committee, concedes that these water carriers should not be regulated, so long as we cannot regulate the Canadian trade. That competition, I will say to the Senator, is very keen.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be happy to submit the amendment to the experts.

Mr. BROWN. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that.

Mr. WHEELER. I call attention to the fact that on page 9 is to be found the following provision:

(7) Nothing in this act shall apply to the transportation of property by interstate contract carriers by water, which by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers by water in the same trade or route; and the Commission shall proceed immediately to determine the transportation to be so excluded and shall from time to time make such modifications of its findings as may be necessary to carry out the policy declared in section 1.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator from Montana fully intends to cover what we have in mind, but the Great Lakes Transit Corporation has at various times been in competition with the bulk carriers during the carrying season, and we would like to have that situation taken care of, if it is possible, so that there would be no question about the exemption.

Mr. WHEELER. I call attention also to the next section on page 9, as follows:

(8) Whenever it shall appear from complaint made to the Commission or otherwise that the rates, fares, regulations, or practices of water carriers engaged in transportation to or from a port or ports of any foreign country in competition with interstate common carriers by water or interstate contract carriers by water cause undue disadvantage to such interstate carriers by reason of such competition, the Commission may relieve such carriers from the provisions of this act to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner as in its judgment may be necessary to avoid or lessen such undue disadvantage consistently with the public interest and policy declared in section 1 of this act.

Mr. BROWN. That would mean, I will say to the chairman of the committee, that if the Canadian lines operating from Duluth, we will say, to Port McNichol or some port lower on the St. Lawrence River or on the lower Great Lakes, should change their grain carrier rates, and the rate fixed for the American carriers had been established because of the situation I have mentioned, then before the American carriers could meet that competition they would have to make application to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. I merely plead for provision to be made whereby the Great Lakes bulk carriers would have the absolute right to fix their own rates, because the Commission cannot fix the rates of the Canadian carriers. That is all I seek to bring about.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the junior Senator from Michigan that the committee considered that matter and worked out the paragraph I have read, and the members of the committee felt, and the Interstate Commerce Commission felt, and so did the experts, that the provision to which I have referred gave ample protection to the lake carriers, and all that has to be done is to make the regulation.

The water carriers do not want any regulation at all. They want everything thrown wide open. So long as the paragraph I read is contained in the bill I believe the water carriers have no reason at all to complain. We want to go along with them as far as possible, without completely relieving them of any regulation of any kind or character at all times and under all conditions.

If the Senator from Michigan can work out something else to help expedite the matter, I am perfectly willing to take it up for consideration.

Mr. BROWN. I intend to submit an amendment to the chairman before today's session shall have been concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. We have a number of industries in Pennsylvania which transport their own goods from one place to the other on the rivers. Is there anything in the bill which affects private transportation such as that?

Mr. WHEELER. There is nothing in the bill that affects private transportation on boats privately owned and controlled. We take it that we cannot regulate private transportation. Much as we may think it should be regulated, yet there exists no basis on which the Government of the United States can regulate a ship which is owned by a man who transports his own goods from one place to another.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I wish to say to the distinguished chairman, with whom I have worked very closely, that I do not fully concur in that statement, because I think the time may come when we shall have to regulate the transportation of private property by the owner of such property when it is transported for commercial purposes. But I fully concur in the statement of the chairman of the committee that there is nothing in the bill which undertakes to do it. However, I hope the time will come during my term of service in the Senate when we shall undertake certain regulations that is not now considered in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I may say that I have presented the question to the committee, and the Senator from Kansas made the same statement there that he has now made on the floor of the Sena.e. Incidentally let me say that I have had the fullest cooperation of every member of the committee, including the Senator from Kansas, and I desire here and now to say, what I have said privately previously, that I do not think there is any Senator who has such wide experience or who so thoroughly understands the rate-making problems and the problems of transportation as does the Senator from Kansas, because of his wide experience in handling such matters before he came to the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The definition which the Senator has just given, sustained by the Senator from Kansas, of this particular section, goes, it seems to me, to the very heart of one of the chief fears upon the Great Lakes with respect to the matter. The Senator from Montana makes the unequivocal statement that this measure is not intended to reach the bulk carrier which is self-contained, within an operating business unit.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Their fear is that this language actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers—might mean something else, for they are, in a way, in competition, because, of course, their commodities could be transported by rail.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but they are not contract carriers. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan that they do not have the slightest reason to fear. I know, as all other members of the committee know, what are the views of the committee and what are the views of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Commission's views were presented in testimony before the committee. Commissioner Eastman has presented the views of the Interstate Commerce Commission. So I ask, Why should the contract carriers have anything to fear when the Commission has already expressed its views in advance as to what its position is? So the contract carriers have nothing to fear.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator's statement is very important, and ought to be very comforting, and ought to be very conclusive, whether it is or not.

Mr. WHEELER. They do not have anything in the world to fear about it.

This is the position in which we find ourselves: For years on the floor of the Senate I have advocated deepening and widening of the channels of the Mississippi River, the Ohio River, and the Missouri River; I have been in favor of that. We have taken millions of dollars out of the Treasury of the United States to be used for that purpose—

Mr. REED. A billion and one-half dollars.

Mr. WHEELER. We have taken a billion and a half dollars out of the Treasury of the United States to be used to widen and deepen those river channels. Who has paid the taxes to provide that money? All the people of the United States, including the railroads of the country, have paid those taxes. They have helped to pay for the widening and deepening of those channels with their own money. In view of the fact that the Government furnishes the water carriers with the means to carry on their transportation, they should at least submit to having their rates regulated upon a fair basis with their competitors. I challenge anyone to say that that is not fair and just.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I should like to conclude with one further statement before I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

A great ado was made by some persons who came before the committee in respect to this matteer. One man who appeared before the committee said he represented 400,000 farmers in the Northwest. He said he represented the farmers in Montana. I telegraphed to Montana, and the reply was he did not represent the farmers there at all.

The claim is made that the consuming public gets the benefit of the channels we have made in the rivers. Let me read a statement from one of the oil companies. Before I do that I wish to call the Senate's attention to the fact that we held hearings on a bill intended to do away with the socalled Pittsburgh-plus basis of rates, or what is called the basing-point system. The fact of the matter is that when the oil companies, the steel companies, or any of the rest of them ship their products by water they receive a benefit, but the consuming public does not get one 5-cent piece benefit out of it. At a matter of fact, when the companies ship oil or steel on the Mississippi River they charge the railroad rate from Pittsburgh to the particular point, whether the commodity is shipped by water or whether it is shipped in any other way.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator said that shipments by water bear the railroad rate. That rate, however, is much less than it would be if we did not have water transporation, is it not?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator misunderstood me. I said that when most of these shippers ship by water up the Mississippi River or down the Mississippi River, or up the Ohio, they pocket the difference they would have to pay if they shipped by rail. Steel, oil, and other corporations receive the benefit of the lower rates, but they do not pass the benefit on to the consumer. They put it in their pockets.

Mr. MILLER. I misunderstood the Senator. I understood the Senator to say the rate was no different.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention to some testimony. In a recent hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission, held in Memphis, Tenn., in February 1939, on fourth section application No. 17,430, involving rates on gasoline and kerosene from Baton Rouge to Alabama points, a Mr. A. M. Stephens, general traffic manager of the Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, testified as follows:

We do not take into consideration any evaporation charges in connection with any service we made for any individual terminals, because we find that on all of our inland-waterways terminals we amortize this investment; as to our inland-waterway terminals, we usually amortize them within 2 or 3 years. In other words, the money we make on our water terminals, we put in our pocket. We don't pass it on to the consumer. No other oil company does, that I know of, except where there is price competition, and naturally, in that condition, we have a depreciation set up that may last for in that condition, we have a depreciation set up that may last for 10 years, but in the meantime we have fully amortized the investment shown in our accounting procedure, and the economy that we realize is credited to the P. & L. account for margin.

We have such a great savings in our waterways terminals, inland-waterways terminals, that we eliminate entirely evaporation, and insurance, in all of our calculations. That enters into our general account, by reason of the great number of water terminals operating at the present time on the South Atlantic coast, the Gulf coast, and the Ohio River, and the evaporation loss, from our aggregate figures, is less than 40 points; in other words, it is less than onehalf of 1 percent. I have the figures here showing our evaporation losses in connection with all of our transportation to these Ohio River points which I have indicated, and I will be glad to file them for the record if they are so desired, because they do bear out my statement that our evaporation losses are less than one-half of 1 percent of the total.

On cross-examination the following occurred:

Question. (By Mr. Beck.) Mr. Stephens, with regard to the possibility of imposition of tolls on these rivers, has that received the full consideration of your company in dealing with these matters? That is, do you view things like that for any particular time in future?

Answer. Oh, yes. We exercise our judgment and foresight in the Answer. On, yes. We exercise our judgment and foresight in the consideration of all of these matters. We have found that none of the other companies are passing any of this money on to the consuming public.

Now, as an instance in mind, I have before me at the present time a statement of the market price delivered to points in northern Georgia, to which you move gas out of Guntersville, for northern Georgia, to which you move gas out of Guntersville, for instance, at Dalton when you first began operation the market price at Dalton was 18 cents; that is the posted market on May 8, 1938. In December 1938 it was 17.5 reflecting a reduction in the refined market at Shreveport and the Gulf coast, and it represents a one-half cent reduction entirely in the tank price so far as dollars are concerned. In other words, Mr. Beck, we have not seen any passage of this savings to the consuming public. We have examined the markets at Dalton, Fort Payne, Cedar Bluff, etc., and we have not found that any of that has been passed on to the consumer. on to the consumer.

Question. And there are other cases though where you could find just the opposite conditions?

Answer. No; I have not. I have tried to but I cannot.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. These commodities are carried by private carrier.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And whatever they save they do not pass on to the consumer.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe the man quoted testified that whenever there was competition in price, they did pass on the saving

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, that is true when there is competition; but I have a letter from a representative of the Farmers' Union in the Northwest in which he makes the same statements with reference to elevators along the Mississippi River. He states that the saving is not passed on, except at one or two points. He points out that, as a matter of fact, when only a small portion of their wheat is shipped down the Mississippi River the tendency is to break the price in the wheat markets throughout the country; and that the farmer, instead of receiving a benefit from it, actually loses because of that fact. The great bulk of the product is shipped by railroad, and the railroad price is so much; but when a small amount is shipped by water the great bulk of the farmers have to reduce the price of their wheat in order to meet the competition of the small amount shipped by water.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The same situation is true, is it not, in connection with the steel industry, which carries its own products in its own boats?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The industry has a base price. Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. The same thing applies to steel, cement, lumber, and many such products.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Are such carriers regulated under the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. No; those carriers are not regulated.

As I stated a moment ago, I disagree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]. I think there is a serious constitutional question whether or not the Government could regulate my rates when I owned the company. I doubt very much whether the Federal Government could regulate my rates in transporting my family from Washington to Montana by automobile and say that I must pay a certain rate for transporting my family. In other words, I take the money out of one pocket and put it into the other. I do not see that we can do very much about it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is a matter of price fixing instead of transportation.

Mr. WHEELER. Not entirely.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A monopoly has the power to fix prices f. o. b. the factory, and then can take it own load, unregulated, and haul it for a third of the commercial rate. That is a matter of price fixing. Can the Senator tell me what percentage of the traffic on inland waterways is carried by private carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. I think a large portion of it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At least 95 percent?

Mr. WHEELER. I should not be surprised. However, I wish to call attention to the fact that we stood on the floor of the Senate and argued that deepening and widening the channel of the Mississippi River and the Ohio River would render a great service to the consuming public. We have taken the money out of the pockets of the railroads to build these channels, and have taken the traffic away from the railroads and turned it over to the shippers of oil, steel, lumber, cement, and other products. I submit to the Senator that when shippers receive a benefit from such a project, as they have been doing, they ought to pay something toward the building and maintenance of the channels. In other words, when we take money and put it in their pockets, and they do not pass on the saving, there ought to be some provision for the Government to charge tolls, so that the Government may get back some of the money expended.

Mr. REED and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to emphasize the very point which the distinguished Senator from Montana has made. For about 3 months we have struggled to obtain a uniform principle of rate making among railroad carriers, water carriers, and motor-vehicle carriers. I emphasize the phrase, "a uniform principle of rate making." I do not mean uniformity of rates.

The great difficulty we run into is the fact that both the common carriers and the contract carriers are in competition with the so-called private carriers—the big steel companies, the big oil companies, the big cement companies, and others—which are big enough to own their own boats and move their own traffic. It is my belief that when that character of business moves, whether upon a highway or upon a waterway provided by public money out of the Treasury, paid by the taxpayers of the United States, even though a private carrier may be moving its own merchandise or commodities, it ought to pay for the use of those public facilities.

Mr. WHEELER. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. I do not disagree with what he has stated as a fundamental principle. I agree with him. I believe there is something in what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] says, although, as I understand, the bill does not go that far.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. We shall have to come to it some day.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to come to it now. However, that is not the suggestion I wish to submit to the Senator. Take river transportation or, as it is called, water transportation; it has certain inherent advantages over railroad transportation. There is nothing in this bill, is there, that would deprive a shipper on a river of that inherent advantage which I think ought to be his?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. There are many who, like myself, say, "I have no objection to regulation." Indeed, I cannot conceive how any honest man can object to honest regulation at the hands of an honest tribunal. I am proceeding on the theory that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has charge of the work, is honest. The Commission wants to do what is right and is going to do what is right, and any man who himself is not doing anything that is wrong need not fear that kind of regulation. But still the inherent advantage that water transportation gives ought to be preserved and ought to be taken into consideration, as I see it, by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is all provided for in the bill, is it not?

Mr. WHEELER. That is all provided for in the bill. Let me specifically call attention to the provision in the declaration of policy as follows:

Section 1. It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions established through collective bargaining; all to the end of insuring the development and preservation of a national transportation system adequate at all times to meet most economically and efficiently the full needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense.

I wish to call attention to another provision in section 6, which reads:

Provided further, That differences in the classifications, rates, fares, charges, rules, regulations, and practices of a water carrier in respect of water transportation from those in effect by a rail carrier with respect to rail transportation shall not, in and of themselves, be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage, or an unfair or destructive competitive practice within the meaning of section 1 of this act.

We put that in at the suggestion of the water carriers who felt that that was a needed protection.

When it comes to the rate-making provision, as the bill was introduced it did not contain some of the provisions which the committee have put into the bill. The rate-making rule as now provided in the bill is as follows:

SEC. 30. It shall be the duty of the Commission in the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates, to give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed.

Let me say that as the recommendation was made by the President's committee it called for the elimination of that particular sentence as to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic. I said very frankly that I felt that wording ought to be in the legislation, and that I would not eliminate it. So it is in the bill. Under it the Interstate Commerce Commission must consider the effect of the rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed. In other words, if they are going to regulate a rate on the Mississippi River for a water carrier they can consider the effect of the rate on the movement of traffic for that particular kind of transportation.

The rate-making rule further provides-

To the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient transportation service by such carrier or carriers at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable such carrier or carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service. When used in this section the term "rates" means "rates, fares, and charges, and all regulations and practices relating thereto."

No one who is willing to have honest and efficient regulation, if he has not anything to cover up, should object to that provision. Our country is committed to regulation. Some people tell me that regulation is a failure and that it will never be completely successful; some say that it creates monopoly; some say that the railroads would have been better off if there had never been any regulation of them; some say that the utilities should not be regulated and that they would be better off without regulation; but the Congress of the United States has announced its policy; and all we are seeking to do by this proposed legislation is to say that the competitors in the various fields of transportation, particularly water carriers, inasmuch as we take millions of dollars out of the Treasury every year to improve the waterways so that the water carriers may operate upon them and the railroads pay a part of that cost, ought to be regulated in the same manner and under the same circumstances as the other forms of competing transportation are regu-

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the able Senator and his fellow workers have done a very excellent job, although some amendments may be required that will not only clarify present provisions but perhaps change substantive provisions. There is in my possession which I have been reading—and I have just had it in my hands for a few moments—very impressive minority views submitted by the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead]. So long as the Senator from Montana has been referring to water competition, I wish to quote from the minority views of the Senator from Minnesota briefly for the Record. He says:

Has the demand for regulation of water carriers come from the farmers? Positively no.

Mr. WHEELER. How is that?

Mr. McNARY. I am quoting from paragraph 6, on page 2, of the minority views of the Senator from Minnesota, and I wish to submit this statement to the Senator:

Has the demand for regulation of water carriers come from the farmers? Positively no. Has it come from the consumers? Positively no. Has it come from commercial organizations? Positively no. Has it come from the processors or distributors? Positively no. Where has the demand for regulation come from? It comes from the railroads.

That is the statement in the minority views of the Senator from Minnesota. I have no knowledge on that point, and I was curious to know if anyone, save the railroads, has asked for regulation of water carriers.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that the water carriers themselves asked for it. The Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly urged regulation of water carriers. Mr. Eastman, for whom we all have the greatest respect, and concerning whom I believe no one on the floor of the Senate would say that he was controlled by the railroads of the country, when he was coordinator and making a study of the subject submitted to Congress a bill to regulate the water carriers. That bill came before the Interstate Commerce Committee in 1935; it was reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee after full hearings in 1935. The President of the United States in his message of 1935 recommended it. The bill was reintroduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress, and in 1937 the committee authorized a favorable report thereon to the Senate. So, when it is stated that merely the railroads are asking for the regulation proposed, I think it is plainly apparent that that is erroneous. I will quote the testimony of Mr. Ames, of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line:

And on behalf of that company I desire to go on record as saying that we are not opposed to regulation; in fact, we favor regulation which will bear equally and protect equally all forms of transportation. We do not favor the regulation of water carriers for the benefit of rail carriers, or vice versa, but we do favor reasonable regulation.

I would like also to point out to the committee that the lack of regulation of a water line has not the benefit that some people advocate for it, but in many respects it is a distinct handicap. Let us assume that the rail carriers reduce their rate which is competitive with the water carrier, and the water carrier appears before the regulatory body, protesting that rate, and the water carrier itself is not regulated. There is a tendency on the part of the regulatory body, and I think it is a pardonable and justifiable tendency, to say, "Why should we prevent the rail carrier from reducing its rate when we cannot prevent you?"

Let me say further—

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator's line of argument.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to say a word further, and then I will yield. In the 1920 Transportation Act, what did the Congress of the United States do? The courts construed that act as a mandate from Congress to the Commission to foster and to guard the railroads. The Congress of the United States said to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "It is your duty to protect the railroads of the country." One or two members of the Interstate Commerce Commission have said to me that, as a matter of fact, the passage of the pending bill would benefit the water carriers for exactly the same reason stated by Mr. Ames. They say, "The water carriers charge that we are railroad-minded; we are not railroad-minded, but the Congress of the United States has said that we must protect the railroads. Here is a water carrier that cuts a rate. We cannot say whether that is a justifiable rate or whether it is not. The railroads say, 'We want to cut our rates to meet the cut in the water rates.' We say to ourselves, 'When a water carrier cuts a rate and cannot say whether such rate is justified or not, why should we not permit the railroads to cut their rates?""

The water carriers, as will be recalled, came before the Interstate Commerce Committee and opposed the repeal of the long-and-short haul. I dare say if it had not been for me that that bill would have been reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee during the Seventy-fourth Congress. It passed the other House twice, and it would have been passed by the Senate of the United States during the Seventy-fifth Congress if it had reached the floor of the Senate in time.

The reason I was opposed to it was because if we turned the railroads of this country loose and said to them, "You can cut your rates to any point you desire," in my judgment, because of the financial condition of several of the big, powerful railroads, they could drive the water carriers out of business on the Mississippi River. Then, after that, they could put up their rates. I said, "That is unfair"; the water carriers came in and opposed it, and I agreed that that was not the right thing to do. I said to them at that time, however, "You are coming here and saying that the railroads should not be permitted to cut their rates. You are opposed to the fourth section, and so am I; but," I said, "on the other hand, you cannot come here and say in one breath, 'We do not want to be regulated,' and in the next breath, 'We want the railroads regulated so that they cannot compete with us.'"

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the doctrine the Senator promulgated is sound. I should like to protect the railroads if they need protection, and in any case in which honesty would give them protection, of course, they ought to have it, the same as everybody else; but take the case of the witness Ames, to whom the Senator has referred. At the present time the water carriers are not regulated.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the railroads are now in a position to complain. In order to have a right to complain, they ought to put themselves in the same attitude as those against whom they make the complaint.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose, however, this bill should become a law, and an article of freight were to be transported which admittedly could be carried by water better than by railroad, and suppose the railroad should undertake to reduce its rate down to the water rate: Would there be anything in the law to prevent the railroad from doing that?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course there would be.

Mr. NORRIS. Disastrous rates can be brought about by reducing them just as well as by increasing them, as a matter of fact.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. And the water carrier ought to be protected on the freight that ought to be carried by water rather than on the railroad.

Mr. WHEELER. It would be absolutely protected under this measure.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I want to see done.

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any question about it. Under the rate-making provision and under the other provisions I have read, there is not any question about it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. This seems to be an appropriate point to deal with the interest which the farmer, and particularly the grain farmer, may have in this so-called river navigation. The distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the disguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], and other Senators have had this question in their minds. It came up frequently in the hearings.

It so happens that I have tried more freight-rate cases for the farmers, paid by the farmers when they had any money which they usually did not have—and farm organizations, than have all the rest of the practitioners before the Interstate Commerce Commission combined; and in these various cases the question of market prices, and what fixes them, and the effect of transportation costs, has been thoroughly threshed over.

After the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], with a witness from St. Paul, became concerned about the effect upon the grain farmer if this bill should pass, I wrote a letter to General Ashburn, who is the chairman of the Board and president, I think, of the Inland Waterways Corporation. That Corporation does not operate on the Ohio River. It does operate upon the upper Mississippi River, the Missouri River, and some other streams.

I hope Senators will pay attention to this particular point. The Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from South Dakota, and the Senator from Minnesota ought to be especially interested.

No wheat or other grain is raised within the limits of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, or any of the other towns up and down the river. The only way in which a farmer could get any benefit out of the river rate would be if his grain should move on a combination rail rate to the river, plus the river rate from there on. In rate discussion and practice and rate cases we make a clear distinction between rail-and-water rates, which are one thing, and port-to-port rates on the water, which are another thing.

So I wrote to General Ashburn, because I was seeking to find out how much benefit the farmer back in the country might get out of these water rates; and the only way he could get it would be if his grain moved on a joint rail-and-water rate. Under date of May 10 I have a letter from General Ashburn. The Inland Waterways Corporation is the largest operator on the inland rivers. I wrote General Ashburn and asked him how much of the grain moved by the Inland Waterways Corporation moved on joint rail-andwater rates and how much moved on port-to-port rates. I will state the substance of his answer. He divides the freight into wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye. I do not think it is necessary to take the time of the Senate to give the amounts in the different classifications; but here is his total:

Of all the traffic the Inland Waterways Corporation moves of grain, 823,184 tons in the year 1938 moved on port-to-port rates and 6,635 tons—less than 1 percent—moved on joint rail-and-water rates.

Mr. President, there is a "joker" in that. General Ashburn goes on to make this comment with reference to the 6,635 tons that moved on joint rail-and-water rates:

The tonnage shown as handled on joint rail-barge rates is traffic that originated at St. Louis and East St. Louis and had to be diverted on account of our operating disability for movement via rail to Cairo and barge beyond.

Except for that incident, except for the inability of the Inland Waterways Corporation to operate at that particular time between St. Louis and Cairo, which forced some traffic to move over the railroad, not a single ton of grain in 1938 would have moved by the Inland Waterways Corporation on a rail-water rate. Every ton of it would have moved on a port-to-port rate.

I do not mean to say that in a few instances, perhaps, some grain dealer located on the river did not get an advantage out of the water rate. I think that could easily happen; but otherwise I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction, having tried for 20 years the class of cases in which the question of marketing costs and the effect of water transportation rates upon the price of grain to the farmer is involved. I am not talking about an elevator man who has a big elevator, and one of them is in my State, at Kansas City, Kans. I am not saying that he cannot get an advantage and an additional profit out of the lower rate if he has time to use the barges; but I am saying that nobody has ever been able to point out how any benefit has been derived by a farmer in the State of Kansas from the water rate. I think this statement applies equally to Minnesota, to South Dakota, to North Dakota, and the rest of the so-called grain States. It has never been possible for anybody to show that the farmer got any benefit out of the water rate; and General Ashburn's letter to me dated May 10, 1939, is a complete demonstration of that fact.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.
Mr. McNARY. I desire to state to the very able chairman of the committee a hypothetical case, with reference to the regulation of water rates, because of a number of letters and telegrams I have received from the great Columbia Basin country, which annually produces about 90,000,000 bushels of grain known as soft wheat.

That part of the country is the watershed of the Columbia River, and naturally, following the course of least resistance, all the grain raised there follows the water grade down the river, chiefly to ports along the Columbia River, and to some ports on Puget Sound, for shipment to the Far

The section of the country of which I speak includes western Montana and part of western Wyoming, Idaho, eastern Oregon, and eastern Washington. At this time in one of the House bills there is a provision to take care of the construction of a navigation dam at Umatilla Rapids, which is the last link between the Bonneville Dam and Lewiston, Idaho. For a distance of over 350 miles the country is susceptible of service by water transportation, by a system of barges.

A big dam was constructed on the Columbia River 160 miles from the sea, affording transportation for coastwise vessels. Locks also have been constructed at Bonneville, which permit transportation for an additional 50 miles, up to what is called The Dalles, Oreg., nearly 200 miles inland from the Pacific Ocean. Beyond that, if a dam is constructed at Umatilla, water transportation by barges could be had 350 miles from the sea, to the mouth of the Snake River in Idaho.

My question is, if this transportation on the Columbia River, far distant from the sea, is regulated under the provisions of the pending bill, would it in any way affect the cost the farmers must pay for sending their wheat in bulk to be converted at mills on the Sound, and at Portland, and at The Dalles, or elsewhere? I am propounding the question, because I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill. I am interested in the cost the farmer must pay for the transportation of his wheat to the mills and thence, converted into flour, to the Orient.

I want the able Senator's expression, with which I shall be content, as to whether there is anything in the bill which would injuriously affect the producers or shippers of wheat by reason of the regulation of water transportation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, there should not be the slightest difficulty in the world. If the Interstate Commerce Commission is honest and does an honest job—and we all think they are honest—then there cannot be any damage at all. We have written into the bill a provision that they shall take into consideration the advantages of inland water transportation.

I wish to read the Senator an editorial which appears in the Farmers' Union Herald of Minneapolis, in which it is stated:

THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM

One of the difficult problems which the administration of President Roosevelt has on its hands is that of reorganizing the Government's method of regulating transportation. There are a number of sick railroads subsidized by means of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans, thus making some kind of an interstate transportation program imperative. The administration has also to deal with a very complicated highway truck transportation system which is in open competition with the reilroads subsidized by Federal loans. There is also water transportation, and finally there will be airship transportation of what is now known as "express."

In cooperation with President Roosevelt, Senator WHEELER is endeavoring to bring out of the Interstate Commerce Committee a bill regulating all kinds of common carrier transportation.

In anticipation of such a measure there have been widespread fears on the part of truck and waterway transportation interests that a regulatory measure will be administered in the interest of the railroads and to the disadvantage and injury of highway and water transportation. No one may safely predict what an administrative body may do when clothed with power by Congress, but it seems obvious that if we are to have Government regulation of one form of transportation, we must, of necessity, regulate all forms.

One of the objects of regulation was to stop discrimination, unfair rate structures, and rebating. When there is no regulation it follows that the evils referred to above may be a part of all transportation systems.

The cooperatives, both marketing and purchasing are, of course, concerned about regulation of transportation. Cooperatives are nonprofit organizations and they, therefore (rightly, we think) expect to be exempted from restrictions laid on privately owned corporations which operate solely for profit. While in Washington the National Board of the Farmers Union and the Northwest Farmers Union legislative committee asked Senator WHEELER for amendments to the transportation bill now being considered in committee, which amendments will protect the cooperatives.

Then he proceeds to talk about the cooperatives, and states that they are in favor of the proposed legislation.

In addition to that, I have a letter from Mr. M. W. Thatcher, of the Farmers Union Grain Terminal Association, dated at St. Paul. He comments upon the fact that a Mr. Feltus came here and said he represented 400,000 farmers. Mr. Thatcher states:

There are just a bunch of red faces out here, about the appearance of Mr. Harry Feltus, when he attempted to speak for our Northwest Farmers Union group at the hearings on your "transportation bill." Shortly after the Feltus episode there were about 40 members of our Northwest group in meeting at St. Paul. I brought the matter before them. They unanimously condemned brought the matter before them. They unanimously condemned the statement of Mr. Feltus, and the group passed a resolution that hereafter no one, except their legislative representative, was to speak on national matters before committees at Washington, D. C. So far as the regulation of traffic on the river is concerned, there is no more reason why traffic thereon should not be regulated than as applied to railroads. In any important branch of our industry as applied to railroads. In any important branch of our industry bad practices, such as discrimination, rates, rebates, preferences, or what not, can only be minimized through governmental regulation. There is no opportunity to enjoy an ordered society without some degree of regimentation and regulation.

Years ago we built a terminal elevator at St. Paul on the river. I have managed that elevator, with over 2,000,000 bushels capacity, for several past years. I have made many attempts to secure facilities and rates of transportation that would permit us to put farmers' wheat through that elevator and ship it abroad in competition with others. I have not once been quoted a rate on the river that would enable us to ship any grain in foreign commerce because the would enable us to ship any grain in foreign commerce because the rate was just too high. We have been able to move a little oats and barley in domestic commerce down the river, and all in the world that accomplishes is to put us into competition with producers in other areas who had a railroad advantage over us. That sort of business, which would give us an advantage by river over another group of farmers in the United States using rail service, tends to bear down on price of the agricultural product. It certainly doesn't enhance the income to agriculture.

Our entire group has historically been for development of water.

Our entire group has historically been for development of waterway transportation. The theory back of our support rests upon an excess charge by the railroads, but since railroads are generally in the "red," the question now comes to our mind as to whether or not there is a great deal of value in our old position. We believe that there is a great deal of value in our old position. We believe that water transportation is desirable as a means of competition against railroads, which might otherwise have a monopoly. It is generally believed amongst our group that with some of the products moved up the river to our consumers, that gain from lower transportation is sometimes retained by the shipper and not of any material benefit

I call attention to another provision, in which I am sure many Southern Senators are interested-

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator bear with me before we desert the particular section of the country to which I referred?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I do not wish to discuss the bill from a sectional standpoint, of course. There is much to be commended in the idea of a regulated system applicable to all forms of transportation, I grant. In my desire to pursue the matter further, I am curious to know what effect regulation of water transportation would have upon the transportation companies and those affected thereby. Would it have a tendency to increase or diminish the rates? Would it leave them in statu quo? Would regulation of water transportation be of any advantage to the man who raises wheat in western Montana and wants to employ the Columbia River and its tributaries to get his wheat to the sea, for the purpose of converting it, and then shipping it across the water to the Orient? Would it be of any benefit to the water-transportation companies? What may we expect from this measure? I have no fixed views on the subject, but many letters come to me from those who are satisfied with the present unregulated conditions, who are hopeful of an extension of the service, and worder what will occur if regulation is fastened upon them now. Will it be to their advantage or to the railroads' advantage? Will it affect them in any way? Is it a thing which we want to see applied to a great region where 90,-000,000 bushels of soft wheat are annually exported, from five States?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will answer the question as best I can. The pending bill regulates transportation. Of course, what benefit will come from the legislation it is difficult for me to say, because to a large extent it depends upon the kind of regulation provided by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Do we want cutthroat competition? Should we have cutthroat competition as between water carriers? Should we have cutthroat competition as between railroads? Should we have cutthroat competition as between trucks and busses? One of the great problems which faces the United States is whether or not that would be more beneficial, or whether it would be more beneficial to have regulation. Upon that subject we can get as many viewpoints as there are people.

Generally speaking, the industry has almost universally said, whenever we talk regulation with them, "We do not want regulation. It will be more detrimental and costly to the consuming public if we have regulation."

The shipping industry is in a bad way, in any instance. It has been stated that the shipping industry has been put out of business in many places because someone would go into business temporarily and cut rates, and the established industry would have to come down in its rates. Such practices destroy the whole economic order of the industry.

We found a similar situation in the case of trucks and busses. They were against regulation. For 10 years they fought it bitterly before the committee. Finally regulation was imposed on them, and they are satisfied now, and say that it has really been helpful to the industry.

With reference to the particular thing to which the Senator has called attention, certainly if the Interstate Commerce Commission carries out the provisions of the proposed legislation there cannot be any complaint that the rates imposed on the carriage of wheat are not fair and reasonable and just. I call attention to the rate-making policy, and to the provision that the Commission must take into consideration whether or not a permissible rate will result in moving wheat.

If the wheat will not move, then the rate is too high, and it should be lowered.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator must have a very sincere feeling in the matter because some of the wheat to which I adverted comes from his own State-

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is correct. Mr. McNARY. Which the Senator so ably represents.

Let me ask a question which I think is pertinent. In the Senator's judgment, will the wheat carriers of those five States receive any benefit by reason of the proposed regu-

Mr. WHEELER. To be honest and fair, I must say that I do not know whether they will receive any benefit from it at They will receive benefit at least in one way. If the railroads of the United States or the shipping interests cannot continue to operate successfully, and we have a complete break-down of the transportation system of America, then there is no question in the world that the farmers of the Northwest and other sections of the country will be injured. This bill through regulation seeks to insure for the people not only of Montana, but of all the States, a sound and coordinated transportation system.

When representatives of the railroads of the country came before the committee and testified in favor of repealing the fourth section they said, "If you will repeal the fourth section and let us reduce rates we will do so, and that will be helpful to the farmers of the Northwest. It will be helpful to those farmers if you let us be unregulated when we come in competition with water carriers."

Temporarily such a situation would undoubtedly have brought down railroad rates, until such time as the rail carriers put the water carriers entirely out of business, and then the rail carriers would have put up the rates again.

I do not wish to see the water carriers put out of business. I wish to see the water carriers maintained, and I wish to see continued competition between the rail carriers and the water carriers. I think the pending bill will preserve that competition. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that if the provision of the bill regulating water carriers is not adopted the only fair alternative is to repeal the fourth section entirely and turn the railroads loose and say to them, "Go in and have cutthroat competition," and then we should see where the water carriers would be.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe Commissioner Joseph Eastman appeared before our committee 2 or 3 years ago and said that he did not believe it was necessary to regulate the large bulk carriers on the Great Lakes. Does the Senator remember that?

Mr. WHEELER. I think so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He said it would not be necessary to regulate the large bulk carriers on the Great Lakes because there could be no possible competition between them and the railroads. Of course, there cannot be any competition between them. How can there be competition when wheat can be hauled by water from Duluth to Buffalo, a thousand miles, for $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and the railroads have to charge 18 cents? Under such circumstances there can be no competition.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. So what is the use of talking about destructive competition when there cannot be any? If it is desired to have the railroads carry that freight, then take all the boats off the Great Lakes. But at the same time the bill contains no provision for regulating the private water carriers and other private carriers.

Mr. WHEELER. We are not regulating the bulk carriers either.

So the bill does not affect them.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No. And they carry 95 percent of the business.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the use of arguing about regulating the carriers to which the Senator is referring? The bill does not provide for their regulation, and we are not attempting to regulate them.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I make the point because the bill attempts to regulate common carriers whose services anyone can make use of and get the benefit of low common carrier rates, but leave unregulated the private carriers and the bulk carriers owned by the monopolies, which by their power can fix prices, get the advantage of the low rates on the waterways, and retain the resulting profits, which should be passed on to the consumers.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator is opposed, is he not, to putting tolls upon these waterways?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Who are making the profits from use of the waterways? They are the ones the Senator is condemning; they are the oil companies, the steel companies, and the cement companies, and the Senator does not wish to see a toll charge applied to them so they can help pay for building the waterways. I say that they should help to pay for the canalization of the waterways.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I claim that is an entirely different matter.

Mr. WHEELER. No; it is not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is a price-fixing proposition, and the Senator is well aware that our committee held hearings for several weeks 2 or 3 years ago when representatives of the basing point industries came before the committee. The Senator I am sure agrees with me that legislation should be enacted to compel those industries to give the public the benefit of a fair price, and to eliminate the base price fixing.

Mr. WHEELER. I not only agree with the Senator, but I introduced a bill to that effect and tried to secure its enactment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator would push such a bill, I think it would be of great service to the public.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that as the result of the investigation which our committee conducted, and the hearings we had, and as the result of the bill being introduced the Federal Trade Commission has taken the matter up and held hearings on it. It now has some matters relating to that subject pending before it and is trying to remedy the situation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will permit me a moment before we leave the St. Paul situation and Inland Waterways Corporation, with respect to the shipment of wheat between St. Louis and Minneapolis, let me say that, as a matter of fact, there has not been any channel in the Mississippi River of sufficient width and depth to justify a transportation company in giving a constant rate to a shipper because it could not tell whether or not its boats would have sufficient water, due to lack of canalization. Half of a load might be carried or a third of a load might be carried, and if there were a great deal of rain a whole load could be carried; but it would never be known just when it was going to rain. So until the canalization is finished the river channel cannot be depended upon with respect to cargo-carrying capacity. Therefore, no rate can be depended upon, nor can it be certain that shipment can be made. Consequently, I think it is neither just nor fair to talk about what has not been carried on the Mississippi River for the channel has not been of sufficient depth. It is just as ridiculous to talk about that as to talk about how much freight is carried on a railroad when two-thirds of the line has not been completed.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is asking for a channel to be made so that boats carrying full cargoes can go from the mouth of the Mississippi River up to Minneapolis and St. Paul. However, in order to deepen the channel it is necessary to take money out of the Public Treasury. If a channel were provided so that full cargoes could be carried on the river, then the oil companies and steel companies and all the rest of them could use the river and make money out of that traffic, but not have to pay a cent back to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; the Senator is not fair. I have always said that the Congress should see to it that the practice of using multiple basing points for fixing prices should be stopped because it is a monopolistic practice.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it is a monopolistic practice, but it is one which the Senator knows and which those who followed the investigation held by the committee know is very difficult to reach. It is easy for us to stand on the floor of the Senate and say that we ought to abolish such practices, and I have tried as hard or harder than anyone in the Senate to abolish them, but I am not so simple-minded as to think that it is an easy thing to do.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is a matter of price fixing rather than transportation.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; of course it is a matter of price fixing rather than transportation, but certain lower transportation rates afforded by water carriage permit even greater profits for these special interests. I say when the money is taken out of the Treasury of the United States and when the railroads take money out of their pockets to pay taxes for building channels, the water carriers at least should not object to regulation. We have subsidized such carriers by Government improvement of necessary facilities for them. The Government has spent millions of dollars every year to protect them along the coasts. We do everything for them. We widen the river channels. Yet they do not want to have their rates regulated.

The Congress has spoken upon that subject. The Congress in 1936, when it passed the present maritime law, said in that piece of legislation that jurisdiction should be transferred to the Interstate Commerce Commission within 2 years by order. The difficulty with that is that when it comes to transferring it by Executive order a bad muddle is created. It cannot be done efficiently under the present set-up, so consequently it is necessary for us to pass the pending legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I realize that probably the Senator's committee would not have authority seriously to consider the levying of a tonnage tax on water transportation, but the fact remains that we are spending approximately $60,000,000 a year on the upkeep of our waterways—not on new work but on upkeep. There is no reason why the traffic should not bear that charge, or at least some of it.

Mr. WHEELER. It ought to bear some of that charge.

Mr. MILLER. Has the Senator's committee given any consideration to that point in lieu of undertaking to regulate water transportation through the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. The committee has not done so, for the simple reason that it is not a matter that comes before our committee.

Mr. MILLER. I know the Senator's committee does not have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. WHEELER. A bill is brought before Congress by which provision is made for deepening and widening every little river, with the idea that some day in the United States we shall establish a great transportation system. In Germany and some other countries that has been done, because those countries are geared to that sort of transportation; but in the United States we can take money out of the Treasury of the United States and widen and deepen every creek that runs into the Mississippi River, and yet we will never have any water transportation to speak of. The only accomplishment would be to put more money into the pockets of the great monopolies and trusts of the country, and they would not pass on the benefits they receive to the general public, nor would they pay taxes upon the improvement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Does the bill deal with inland waterways as well as the coastwise trade?

Mr. WHEELER. It does.

Mr. McNARY. Would a ship which starts from Puget Sound in Washington, goes through the Panama Canal and reaches its destination in Boston be under regulation?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. It would be under regulation with respect to its rates.

Mr. McNARY. Beside the coastwise trade, does the bill attempt to regulate ships doing a general world trade?

Mr. WHEELER. No, indeed; we do not touch that at all, because it is impossible to regulate the rates of the world trade when they come in competition entirely with foreign commerce.

Mr. McNARY. Take the Panama-Pacific Line, which used to operate from San Francisco to New York by way of the Panama Canal, now running to South American ports from New England ports. Those vessels are now owned by or are largely controlled through loans by the Maritime Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Does the bill regulate the rates on such vessels?

Mr. WHEELER. On ships going to South America?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. No, indeed.

Mr. McNARY. The bill covers only the coastwise trade?

Mr. WHEELER. Coastwise trade and traffic on inland waterways.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to ask another question. How about boats operated by the Maritime Commission and those which are privately owned?

Mr. WHEELER. We are not seeking to regulate Maritime Commission vessels at all.

Mr. McNARY. It is not sought to regulate vessels owned and operated by the Federal Government?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Only those in private hands?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And doing a coastwise business?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. All the promotional activities in the Maritime Commission still remain in the Maritime Commission. The Maritime Commission is a promotional organization and is granting subsidies for building ships. It is also operating ships.

I said to the expert of the Maritime Commission who appeared before the committee, "Are you not in an untenable position?" He said, "Yes; we are in an untenable position, because people come to us and say, 'What use is there in submitting our rates to you, because you are operating boats in competition with us?""

In addition to the untenable position of the Maritime Commission, it seems to me that when we have one body regulating one kind of rates, and another body regulating another kind of rates, one regulating busses and trucks, another regulating water carriers, and a third regulating some other form of transportation, we are bound to have inefficiency. Jealousies are bound to creep in.

It has been contended by almost every President in late years that regulation ought to be under one body. The Interstate Commerce Commission has recommended for years that it be under one commission.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I have been necessarily absent for some 10 days and have not been able to keep in touch with the latest changes in the draft of the bill. I understand, of course, that it applies generally to our domestic water trade.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, our trade to Hawaii, for example, is technically domestic trade.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. As the bill now stands, would boats going from the Pacific coast to Hawaii come within its terms?

Mr. WHEELER. I think they would.

Mr. WHITE. That service is in no respect competitive with railroad service.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me, for example, that boats going to Alaska and boats going to Hawaii are in no degree competitive with either bus or rail transportation.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Therefore, in my judgment, they should not be brought under the terms of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has an amendment which he submitted to me this morning, and which I am taking up with the experts. At first blush I do not see any reason for such vessels being included in the bill, but I wish to submit the question to the experts for their viewpoint.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In connection with the question asked by the Senator from Maine, a shipment from Chicago to Hawaii would be partly by rail, but still it would travel on the same boat which carried a shipment from San Francisco to Hawaii. If that statement is correct, one shipment would be regulated and the other would not.

Mr. WHEELER. A port-to-port shipment would not be regulated.

Mr. WHITE. We do not undertake to regulate the rates of our vessels engaged in foreign commerce. Of course, that is because we cannot regulate our ships and leave unregulated their competitors.

Mr. NORRIS. But unregulated ships could not go to Chicago. The point I am trying to make is that a rate may be partly by water and partly by rail.

Mr. WHEELER. The rail part of the transportation would be subject to regulation.

Mr. WHITE. That situation would apply to ships going anywhere. It would apply to coastwise ships, ships in the intercoastal trade, or what might be called the offshore domestic trade, and ships in the foreign trade.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Maine that they have put their fingers upon one of the difficult things to accomplish. We have done about 999,999 difficult things. The point they mention is perhaps the one-millionth difficult thing. As the Senator from Montana has stated, I have an amendment which will exclude from regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission water traffic to Alaska, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii. Personally I lean to the idea that such traffic ought to be regulated; but, on the other hand, I am frank to say that there is a slight element of doubt.

The Senator from Nebraska raises a question which is important. Answering the Senator from Nebraska with respect to the specific point which he mentioned, the rate from Chicago to San Francisco would be regulated, of course, because it is part of interstate commerce within the country. If the amendment which I have in mind is adopted, the water rate from San Francisco, Los Angeles, or Spokane to Hawaii, or the rates from any of the ports to Puerto Rico or Alaska, would not be regulated.

I am inclined to urge the amendment upon the chairman. However, the question is one of the difficult things with which we are struggling.

Mr. WHITE. I appreciate that. Mr. WHEELER. When we come to regulate motor-vehicle rates, we find contract-carrier busses and common-carrier busses. Those interests are in disagreement on certain points. When it comes to regulating boats, we have contract carriers conflicting with common carriers, and there is a disagreement. We have a disagreement between some of the railroad organizations and the railroads. We have a disagreement between express companies and bus and truck operators. We have a disagreement among some of the railroads themselves. The railroads are opposed to some of the provisions of the bill, but we put them in. Somebody has been opposed to every provision in the bill. However, I wish to say that in my 16 years of experience upon the Interstate Commerce Committee no bill has come before that committee which has had more careful, minute, and detailed study than has this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Returning to the previous discussion with respect to control of inland waterways, I will say to the Senator that I live in the Illinois Valley. We have transportation upon the Illinois River between Chicago and St. Louis and on down the Mississippi to New Orleans. The town in which I live is a focal point for the transportation of wheat and corn down the Illinois. The price of wheat and corn at the elevator there is always 2 or 3 cents higher than it is at elevators some 25 or 30 miles farther inland because of the difference between the rates by rail and those by water.

Under the bill, as I understand it, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have the power, and it would be its duty, to fix rates on the Illinois River with respect to the transportation of that wheat and corn. Would it be possible for the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the rate the same as the railroad rate from that point to St. Louis?

Mr. WHEELER. Not if the Commission does its duty, because the bill specifically provides that it must take into consideration the inherent advantages of the water carrier. Everyone agrees that goods can be shipped more cheaply by water than by rail.

Let me call attention to a case now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is one of a type which frequently arises. The railroads operating along the Mississippi River come before the Interstate Commerce Commission and say, "We want to reduce our rate on sugar so as to obtain some of the traffic from New Orleans up the river to Chicago." Ordinarily, the Interstate Commerce Commission has said, as I would say if I were on the Commission, or as any of us would have to say if we were on the Commission, "We have no power to examine into the barge line, or the ships going up the Mississippi River and the Illinois River. We do not know whether or not they are charging a fair rate. Why should we not permit the Illinois Central to reduce the rate if it wishes? Why should we not let it reduce the rate to whatever point it wishes, inasmuch as we do not regulate the water carrier?"

The water carrier may go in and cut the rate so as to take the business from the railroad, regardless of whether or not the new rate meets the out-of-pocket cost. So the Interstate Commerce Commission has said very frankly that it is put in an extremely difficult position, because it has no jurisdiction over the water carriers to say whether or not they are charging just and reasonable rates.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator touches upon a point which has been a controversial point ever since we have had any competition between railroads and water carriers. We all know that the water carriers got the worst of it, because the railroads cut their rates sufficiently low to put the water carriers out of business, and, after they had been put out of business, up went the rates.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Everybody concedes that to have been the condition in the past, and, of course, those who are living in the territory of the great Mississippi Valley, remembering that, would look with jealous fear upon any attempt to regulate the water carriers. They know how the water carriers once were driven out of business. We know there is some justice in that position, and perhaps there is some injustice in the present situation; but we have got to consider the fact that we have been burned once in the fire and we do not want to be burned again.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me that this question should be looked upon in a reasonable way. In my judgment, from conversations with those who have had to do with the matter, the water carriers would be much better off to have reasonable regulation under provisions laid down in this bill

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is correct, and I am not contending otherwise.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the enactment of the bill will stabilize the condition of shipping in the intercoastal trade and will also stabilize shipping on the inland waterways.

Mr. NORRIS. The fear of which the Senator has spoken exists; there is no doubt about that; and it is a natural fear. It comes from the experience of the people in the past when they got the worst of it and the railroads came out on top.

Mr. WHEELER. And that is what will happen again if proper regulation is not provided.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it will.

Mr. WHEELER. I could not stand on the floor of the Senate and say that the Congress should regulate the railroads and regulate their rates and then turn their competitors loose, particularly when money is being taken out of the Treasury of the United States, which is put there partly by the railroads, to help build the waterways on which the water carriers may operate.

Mr. NORRIS. Conscientiously, I cannot defend a refusal to regulate transportation on the rivers so long as I insist on the regulation of transportation that compete with them, even though my prejudice might be all the other way because of the experience we have gone through in the recent past.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator has stated my position exactly. I have sat on the Interstate Commerce Committee for 16 years, and I have seen what the Senator describes take place. I cannot, so far as I am concerned, in good conscience stand before the Senate and say the Congress ought to regulate the railroads, but it ought to turn their competitors loose and make the railroads go down into their pockets for money with which to build the waterways and then not regulate water carriers.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that those who got the worst of it at the hands of the railroads did so at a time prior to any regulation of the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to make a further observation, if I may, because the pending measure is an important one and I am vitally interested in it.

As chairman of the Illinois Tax Commission under Governor Horner for a period of 2 years, I had occasion, along with two other members of that commission, to assess all the railroad properties in the State. We know, as the Senator from Nebraska said a while ago, and as the Senator from Montana has indicated, that the railroads themselves, because of various practices in which they engaged, were responsible for the regulation to which they were finally subjected.

But the railroads of the country today are in a pitiful and serious condition. Of the 92 railroads that operate in the State of Illinois only three made any money during the 2 years that I was on the Tax Commission of Illinois. I learned as a result of that experience to have a considerable degree of sympathy for the fight that railroads have been making during a time of distress in this country.

I am in sympathy with the pending bill, even though we have inland waterway transportation on the Illinois River. Realizing such transportation does affect to a certain extent the present price of some of the products shipped from the valley of the Illinois; nevertheless, I cannot forget-and I wish to place it in the RECORD-that 10 years ago the old P. & St. L. Railroad, which ran through the section of the State where I live, was practically bankrupt; it was ready to be junked and the two rails of rust were ready to be torn up and the road to pass out of existence. People along that railroad's right-of-way, in order to save the railroad, did a number of things in addition to raising money for the purchase of a 100 additional feet of right-of-way for the railroad. They had public gatherings along the right-of-way to interest people primarily for the purpose of keeping that transportation system in operation; but, secondarily-and this is very important and partially explains the question raised a moment ago by the Senator from Oregon when he asked the Senator from Montana whether or not the farmers were going to be benefited as a result of this measurethe farmers and the taxpayers in my county and in every other county through which this railroad ran were tremendously benefited by the saving of that railroad.

At the particular time to which I have referred I was called upon to make an investigation of what the farmers' land along each side of that railroad was paying toward the upkeep of schools and in county, municipal, and State taxes. Approximately $1 per acre was paid by farm land on each side of that railroad, but the railroad itself at that particular time and today pays between $80 and $90 per acre for taxes into that community. When the people of that section realized how much taxes the railroad companies paid, the farmers wished that there might be a railroad through every 40 acres in the particular county.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator from Illinois. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.
Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Assuming that this bill is introduced for the purpose of helping the railroads by regulating water transportation, how can it do that except by eliminating competition? Does the Senator know of anything in this bill that would eliminate competition?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that I do not assume for a moment that this bill in the regulation of water carriers is going to help the railroads to any appreciable extent. It will but stabilize transportation. The Senator has stated in his minority views on this bill that a certain thing is what the railroads wanted before the railroads ever suggested or ever mentioned it. When they came before the Interstate Commerce Committee, they wanted to repeal the fourth section. If Senators will read the record, they will note that I said repeatedly, "I am against the fourth section because I think it is unfair."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I remember that.

Mr. WHEELER. What ought to be done is to ask the Congress that they be put upon an equal basis so far as regulation is concerned. That is what I said time and time again, I said:

If you would devote the time, energy, and money you have spent trying to bring about the repeal of the fourth section, which I think is unfair and unjustified under the present circumstances, and is discriminatory against certain portions of the country, to a movement to regulate the water carriers, then you would be upon a basis which would be fair and just.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I remember very well the Senator said that.

Mr. WHEELER. I repeatedly said that and I still say it. I do not think, and I do not want anybody to get the idea that I think, that this bill with reference to water carriers is going to put money into the pockets of the railroads. I do say that if we want a coordinated national transportation system, that the bill will stop some of the practices which have been indulged in, such as temporarily cutting the rate on some commodities simply to take some business away from the railroads. That is not helping the general public in the long run.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Was there any testimony taken by the committee that anything like that was done?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not recall that there was. All the Senator has got to do, all anybody has got to do, is to ask any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission that has to deal with the water-carrier situation. As I have said, a case is pending before the Commission now in which the railroads are asking that they may reduce their rate in order to carry sugar up the river. The water carriers are protesting, saying that should not be done, that that would be out-of-pocket money; that the railroads would not get sufficient money to pay the cost of transporting the sugar. What right have the water carriers, when they do not want to be regulated, to say that it would cost the railroads, more money to carry the freight than they would receive? They say they want to protect the consumers; the minute we touch them they say we are injuring the consumers, but when the railroads ask to reduce their rates along the river the water carriers say, "Oh, no; you cannot do that because you are going to lose money when you do it."

As Mr. Ames testified before the committee, he did not blame the Interstate Commerce Commission if they let the railroads reduce their rates to the point where there was an out-of-pocket cost because, he said, we, the water carriers, have no regulation and it cannot be said to the boats that go up the river, "You are losing money if you take certain freight at this price"; but they do say to the railroads, "You cannot cut your rates, because thereby you would lose money." That is the great interest in the consuming public of the people who have boats going up the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Herring in the chair).
Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is it the purpose of the pending bill to increase water rates?

Mr. WHEELER. No, indeed.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What other purpose does it have? Has there been any complaint or any request for regulation of waterways on the same basis as railroads because they have been guilty of the practices that compelled the public to demand regulation of railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What brought on that regulation? It was because the railroads discriminated between shippers; they gave rebates; they discriminated against communities.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the identical thing that is being done at the present time. There are cases of rebating at this moment. Some of the trucks at this very moment are charging one price to one shipper and another price to another shipper.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How can the trucks do that when they are regulated?

Mr. WHEELER. Because there is no adequate legislative provision for preventing it. Some of them have come to us and asked for legislation to prevent that sort of thing. The bus and truck regulation that we passed was not perfect when we passed it, and the Commission then did not know as much as it does now about the regulation of buses and trucks and the practices that grew up. As a matter of fact, some of the bus and truck people have recently come to us asking us to correct some of the evils that are taking place.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On the inland waterways, did any witness come and ask for regulation because his community was discriminated against? Did any shipper come and ask that the waterways be regulated because his competitor was getting a rebate and he was discriminated against?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me answer that question by saying this:

I fought for the passage of the utility holding company bill, and, with the help of others, put it through the Senate. What was the argument that was made on the floor of the Senate by every single Member who was opposed to that bill? They said, "Have any consumers come here complaining and wanting to have this done?" Did a single consumer ever come before the Committee on Interstate Commerce asking that the utility holding company bill be passed? Not one; not one. Who was it that was asking for it?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There were plenty of them in the country.

Mr. WHEELER. Not one of them came before the committee.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Consumers?

Mr. WHEELER. Not one consumer ever came before the Interstate Commerce Committee and asked for the passage of that bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The utility holding company bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Not one ever came before the committee and asked for the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They did not have to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, well, they did not come here. Every time we bring up regulation someone says, "Where is the consumer?" On the other hand, in one or two hours one night, after I made a speech over the radio, I received 2,000 telegrams denouncing me because of the speech I made. From whom did the telegrams come? Supposedly from consumers in the country. I received telegrams from persons in my State who were users of electricity denouncing me, and I received telegrams from persons from one end of the country to the other. Those persons did not come before the committee and testify; no. Not only that but let me say to the Senator that the shipping people came to me and said, "We should like to testify in favor of this bill, but we are afraid."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Shippers on the inland waterways?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I am talking about shippers generally. They said, "We do not dare to do it, because of the fact that we may want a subsidy from the Government of the United States."

Senators talk about the public coming before the committee and demanding regulation. After all, we are here to represent the public. I am here representing as nearly as I can the public of my State and the general public. The public generally do not know, many times, when there should be regulation and when there should not be regulation, because of the fact that they do not know the details. But here is the Interstate Commerce Commission, supposed to be representing the public. It is a public body. Here is the President of the United States. Whom does he represent? He represents the public—not the railroads, but the public. He and other Presidents have recommended this legislation; and to say that the public does not want it is to say that the President of the United States is representing the railroads, and I say that he is not. To say that the public does not want this legislation is to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-owned and railroad-minded, and I submit that it is not.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. The same thing might be said about the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. The majority of them are in favor of this legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. Why, of course—the vast majority. Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. MILLER. A moment ago I understood the able Senator to say that in the event this bill were passed it would add very little to the revenue of the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is true.

Mr. MILLER. Assuming that that is true, I think probably we are all agreed that the basic trouble of our railroads is the rate structure of the Nation.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the basic trouble of our railroads is lack of tonnage, and tonnage cannot be created by legislation.

Mr. MILLER. No; tonnage cannot be created unless we have shippers, and we cannot have shippers unless we have such rates that the shipper can pay them in the first place, and the consumer can pay them on the other end.

This is the fear that I have about this bill, to be perfectly frank:

The argument made by the learned Senator as to the reason for the regulation and coordination of the carriers of the country into one transportation system is sound, to say the least, in theory; and I am aware of the provisions in the bill which undertakes to put a limitation upon the rates that may be fixed for water carriers. I am fearful, however, that when the water carriers are put under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission it will not result in leveling rates, but it will result in freezing rates at the highest points now in existence, and that instead of permitting the water carriers to have the effect upon rates that they now have in some instances, the rates will be raised by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is the fear I have.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, that is the fear that some persons have; but if they take that position they have to say that they do not trust the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MILLER. To be perfectly frank, I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. All right; but I have more faith in them than the Senator has.

Mr. MILLER. I mean that with all due respect; not personally in any way.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly. Let me say to the Senator, however, that I trust the Interstate Commerce Commission just as much as I trust the Congress of the United States. It was the Congress of the United States which in 1920 passed the Transportation Act and said to the Interstate Commerce Commission in effect, "Fix rates so as to protect the railroads." We should not condemn the Interstate Commerce Commission. We should take the responsibility and say, "The responsibility rests upon the Congress of the United States and not upon the Interstate Commerce Commission." We do not like to do it, of course. If there is one thing that a Senator or a Representative likes to do, it is to find somebody he can condemn and say, "I am not responsible for what has been done"; but we are to blame in this instance because of the fact that we passed the law; and, in my judgment, the Interstate Commerce Commission has operated honestly and efficiently under it.

What was proposed in this legislation? Let me call attention to what was proposed. Some of the railroads were complaining because, they said, "the Interstate Commerce Commission leans away over to the busses and trucks. They have become bus- and truck-minded instead of railroadminded." That is what they were saying; and, as a matter of fact, some of the railroads wanted to take away a good deal of power from the Interstate Commerce Commission and place it in another transportation board. I said, "Nothing doing. I will not do it. I have disagreed with the Interstate Commerce Commission at times," and I said, "I thought at times they were wrong; but, frankly, on the whole, I think the Interstate Commerce Commission has been about as reputable and high class a commission as exists in the city of Washington today"; and there has not been any scandal in the Interstate Commerce Commission. So far as I know, there has not been a breath of scandal connected with them; and that is more than we can say with reference to a number of other commissions and bodies that have been set up, not merely during this administration but during administrations which preceded it.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator will remember that when we were getting the bus and truck regulation bill through the Interstate Commerce Committee and through the Senate, it was stated that the Interstate Commerce Commission were entirely ra'lroad-minded and that they would not be fair in the regulation of busses and trucks. Now the railroads have come to us and said, "The Interstate Commerce Commission are too much bus- and truck-minded." I think the same condition will hold with the waterways.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say that I have no complaint against the personnel of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Probably what I object to is the result of enactments by Congress; but apparently this is what has happened so far as the Interstate Commerce Commission is concerned: Most of the tariff rates in this country, as I understand, are carrier-initiated. They are initiated by the carriers themselves, and are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Many of them are.

Mr. MILLER. I think probably 90 percent of the actual tariffs that are in existence are carrier-initiated and approved. Therein lies the trouble with our freight structure. This bill does not seek to remedy that condition.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. MILLER. In my opinion, that is one of the greatest arguments for this bill; and I desire to discuss with the Senator at some time during the afternoon or evening an amendment to section 30, because I want to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission any chance to be blamed for our rate structure,

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to discuss that question with the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. As I now see the matter, the railroads of the country cannot regulate themselves. The Interstate Commerce Commission cannot regulate them, because they are entwined and enmeshed in a rate structure which it would take a Solomon to unravel.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the Senator is correct about that. I have introduced and have pending before the committee a bill to investigate that matter.

bill to investigate that matter.

While I am on the subject of the Interstate Commerce Commission, let me say that the great complaint about the Commission, and one of the difficulties they have had, is that they have taken too long with many of the cases which have been pending. There has been general and universal complaint about the length of time they have taken in the reorganization of railroads and in the decision of the rate cases.

The bill before us seeks to simplify the procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and instead of having the full Commission pass upon every little rate matter which comes before the Commission, to have one Commissioner pass upon a small rate matter, with the right of appeal to a division of the Commission. It will expedite matters, and the reason for many of the complaints which have been made will have disappeared.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bone in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose I am in the situation other Members of the Senate are in, except those who are members of the committee; we find the details of this bill beyond our reach. We must rely, and are relying, upon those who have charge of the bill. I wish to ask this question: To what extent has there been any competition between water carriers and railroad carriers of recent years?

Mr. WHEELER. There is a great deal of it. I called attention to the fact a moment ago that there was in the record the testimony of Mr. Ames, of one of the large carriers on the Mississippi River. The Illinois Central at the present time is asking for permission to reduce its rate on sugar from New Orleans to Chicago, and immediately the boats on the Mississippi River come to the Interstate Commerce Commission and say, "You should not reduce those rates." They present the argument that if the rates are reduced it will mean that they will go down to a point where they will be out-of-pocket cost to the railroads.

Here is an unregulated system. The railroads helped to pay for building the channel in the Mississippi. I mean, the cost comes out of the general fund, but the railroads pay taxes into the general fund, and this channel is built up the Mississippi and the carriers are permitted to use it without any cost, and when the railroad says, "We want to reduce our rates to meet competition," the carriers say, "You cannot do that."

We are saying to the railroads, and I have repeatedly said to them, "In fairness you ought to have the right to reduce your rates if you want to reduce them, when you are competing with an outfit which is not regulated, or both of you ought to be regulated."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Have I made myself clear to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand the Senator's position. But I wish to ask a further question. The Senator and those in charge of the bill have reached the conclusion that it is a wise policy for this country to eliminate competition between the railroads and the water carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. No; we say that there should be competition, but we have written into the proposed legislation a provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission should recognize the inherent advantages in waterways and railroads. If there is to be competition between them, then it should not be one-sided competition. We ought to say that the railroads can cut their rates to any point they wish when they come in competition with water transportation, but when they seek to do that, there is a terrific protest.

The railroads did not ask for this bill. They came and asked for the repeal of the fourth section, and I fought that. A bill making provision for the repeal of the fourth section passed the House twice almost unanimously, but I opposed it in the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I said to the railroads at that time, "I do not think this is the right thing to do. You are discriminating against the Northwest, and you are going to put us out of business. But there is one thing, so far as I am concerned, I would favor.

I would favor regulation so that you would be upon an equal footing."

I do not know whether or not regulation is the right thing, and I do not think anyone else knows, but if we believe in regulation—and the country is committed to regulation—then I say that we cannot let one group be regulated and another group not be regulated. That is the position I take.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I vield.

Mr. AUSTIN. While the distinguished Senator from Idaho was on his feet I desired to ask the author of the bill whether it is not a fact that the bill is so drawn that the regulation is not equal?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. On the contrary, it provides only that degree of regulation which will permit fair competition between the different types of common carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. So, if there is one type of common carrier which has a natural facility or a natural advantage over another, the bill does not require, indeed, I understand it not to permit, the extinguishment of the natural advantage in competition for the benefit of the competitor which has not the advantage. Am I correct in that interpretation?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is entirely correct, and I thank him for his statement. In the rate-making provision, and in three different places in the bill, we wrote in such a provision specifically so as to protect them.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, in the judgment of the Senator from Montana, the bill preserves a certain amount of competition?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Is it the judgment of the Senator from Montana that we can preserve a part of the competition?

Mr. WHEELER. I certainly think we can. If we cannot,

I should be very much disappointed.

Mr. BORAH. After the study given to the bill by the Senator from Montana, I hesitate to disagree with him; but I think that once we enter the field of regulation, the effort to limit and curtail competition to fit certain natural situations is imposing upon the Interstate Commerce Commission a very difficult task.

Mr. WHEELER. That has been done in the case of busses and trucks. For 10 years the busses and trucks complained and were bitterly opposed to any regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They said it was railroad-minded. Eventually we passed legislation imposing regulation, and to-day the railroads say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is bus- and truck-minded. To me that is the best evidence that they are doing a very fair and a very decent job.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose it is also true, is it not, that the pending measure is really here by reason of the terrific condition economically in which the railroads find themselves?

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is one of the reasons.

Mr. BORAH. It must be true, then, that this effort to regulate water transportation is designed in some way to ameliorate the condition of the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. Frankly, I think some of the railroads feel that they will get much greater benefit out of it, so far as this portion of it is concerned, than I have any idea they are going to receive. I do not think they will get very much benefit out of it.

In some instances someone will, in order to take business away from a railroad, cut a rate way down. Temporarily perhaps some consumer will get the benefit. But if the Senator was in the Chamber this morning and heard me explain the bill he noted that when we were constructing the waterways, and deepening and widening the channels, I, in common with other Senators, said on the floor of the Senate what great benefit the consumers would get out of it. The truth is that the consumers have gotten very little if any benefit. The people who got the benefit out of it have been the trusts and the monopolies who were big enough to own their own ships; they charged the same rates the railroads charged, and have stuck the money in their pockets.

Mr. BORAH. That is customary. Does the bill undertake to deal at all with the question of the overcapitalization of the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. No. There is a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce which deals with the reorganization of the roads, and I am hoping we will be able to pass it at this session. We could not, of course, take that up in connection with the pending legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator hope to pass that bill at this session?

Mr. WHEELER. I certainly do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator expect some relief for the public and for the rate payers from that bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I candidly think that that will be the result. So far as the general public is concerned, if we can pass that legislation I think it will be of very material benefit to the consuming public of this country.

Mr. BORAH. I hope so.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to make a number of inquiries concerning the bill as it would affect the rates on wheat from North Dakota to Buffalo, and the rates on coal from Pittsburgh to Duluth and points West.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] has that phase of the question more clearly in mind than I have. As I see the proposed legislation, there is nothing contained in it which will affect the traffic to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred, because it is bulk cargo. When the barge lines carry coal they charge, I believe, 5 cents, and on the return trip, which would otherwise be made empty, they carry wheat for 2 cents. However, the proposed legislation will not affect such transportation.

Mr. FRAZIER. It will not affect the present rate?

Mr. WHEELER. That is my view of the matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I received a copy of a letter written by the chairman of the North Dakota Railroad Commission to both Senators from North Dakota and to me, to which I made reply, a copy of which I sent the Senator from North Dakota. The railroad commission was under considerable misapprehension, predicated upon House bill 4862, the language of which is taken from a bill prepared by the association of American railroads, responsive, as that association considered, to the report of the President's Committee of Six.

I wrote the Railroad Commission of North Dakota that their fears were unfounded; that there was no change in the regulation of intrastate rates, of which they were very fearful. There is such a suggestion in the report of the President's Committee of Six, and the language in House bill 4862. Senate bill 2009, to which the able Senator from Montana and myself, if I may say it, have devoted most of our time for 3 months, has had all the "bugs" taken out of it that we could find were in it, and I assure the Senator from North Dakota there is nothing in the bill which would in any way affect the rate which the North Dakota farmer pays on his wheat, either by railroad from North Dakota to Duluth or Minneapolis, or by boat cargo carriage down the Lakes to Buffalo.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, that is quite a broad statement, because I cannot see how anyone can tell what the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to do under the bill or what the courts are going to do about the changes that are made by the bill.

Mr. REED. In the first place, let us consider the terms of the bill with respect to the bulk-cargo carriers on the Lakes. The bulk-cargo transportation now consists principally of coal north-bound from Lake Erie ports to Lake Superior ports for distribution through Minnesota and North and South Dakota; the bulk-cargo transportation south consists of ore, which is the largest item; of grain, which is the next largest item; and of limestone quarried in northern Michigan and moved to Lake Erie ports for the use of the steel mills there. They are the four large items of bulk transportation—coal up, and grain, ore, and limestone down. The terms of the bill exclude bulk-cargo traffic requiring special equipment designed for that character of traffic and not competitive with other traffic on the same route. I do not know how much more than that could be asked.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Andrews	Downey	King	Reed
Ashurst:	Ellender	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Schwellenbach

Connally	Holt	Overton	Wheeler
Danaher	Hughes	Pepper	White
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just before the quorum call the able Senator from Kansas made the unequivocal statement, which was very welcome, that the exemption at the top of page 9 conclusively takes the bulk carrier out from under the control of the bill. But suppose there were 10 such carriers on the Great Lakes trade, and one of them happened to become a common carrier, would not that immediately throw the other 9 under the terms of the bill, inasmuch as they would then find themselves in competition in interstate commerce with transportation by interstate commerce carriers by water in the same trade or route?

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that whether a carrier is a common carrier or a contract carrier depends partly upon the nature of its business, partly upon what it holds itself out to do, and to a limited degree upon a finding by the Commission as to what it does. This section applies only to contract carriers; and, so far as I know, all the carriers on the Lakes to which reference has been made are contract carriers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose in the off season a contract carrier went into the package freight business for 20 minutes, speaking figuratively. Under the language at the top of page 9 would not the entire bulk carrier traffic be opened to regulation?

Mr. REED. Only insofar as that one carrier is concerned. I will say further to the Senator from Michigan that if I myself were writing the bill, I would bring all the lake carriers under regulation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand.

Mr. REED. They are not brought under regulation by the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very happy that the Senator did not write the bill.

Mr. REED. There was a time when the railroads of the country were in effect contract carriers, because they made different rates to different shippers for the same service under the same circumstances; and because they did so they were finally brought under rigorous regulation. Contract carriers on the Lakes are open to the same criticism; but the bill does not propose to bring them under commoncarrier regulation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At all?

Mr. REED. At all.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me answer the Senator by saying that in the case which he submitted, the carrier to which he referred would not be in competition with the bulk carrier. It might be a common carrier for that specific period of time, but when it began carrying packages it would not be in competition with the bulk carriers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the whole situation is as conclusive as the able Senator from Montana and the Senator from Kansas indicate—and I shall depend upon the validity of their interpretation—I still do not understand why we do not say in plain language that bulk carriers are not included in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me the thing is perfectly simple. Some carrier may claim to be a bulk carrier when it is actually a common carrier. It may say "I am a bulk carrier. I claim to be a bulk carrier, because I call myself a bulk carrier. I am not in competition." In fairness to the common carrier, it seems to me the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to have the power to say whether or not such a carrier is a common carrier, or is in competition.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am inclined to agree with the Senator that his suggestion is a fair one.

Mr. WHEELER. Some of the common carriers which have appeared before our committee are very much in favor of this legislation and feel that it is the proper thing. However, when a contract carrier comes along and says, "I want to get out from under regulation; I am a bulk carrier," all we say is, "If you are competing with a common carrier which is regulated, you must be regulated. If you are not competing, you are in the clear and you are exempt." It seems to me that is all there is to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I completely agree with the philosophy of the bill. I agree with all the arguments which the Senator has presented. My only interest is that I want the legitimate bulk contract carrier to be exempt because he does not belong in the theory of the legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. We all agree to that. Mr. VANDENBERG. Everybody agrees to it. I just want to be sure that the language is sufficiently specific so that, after we have all agreed on it, we who write the bill shall not suddenly discover that those who administer and interpret the law put a totally different construction on the thing we have written.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think the Senator need worry about that contingency because of the fact that the provision was drafted originally by Mr. Eastman, and he takes the same position the Senator takes. We shall always have some "chiselers" who wish to be common carriers, but who wish to be considered contract carriers. They do not want to be regulated. They are "chiseling." We want somebody to have the power to say, "You are a common carrier, and you cannot get away from being regulated in the same way in which ordinary common carriers are regulated."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with that theory. When the Lake Carriers' Association presents its protest, I suppose one might wonder whether or not there is a selfish interest, although I doubt it. However, when the Great Lakes Harbors Association presents a similar statement and expresses the same fear, I am put upon notice to make my inquiry.

Mr. WHEELER. The only difficulty with this legislation is that in the case of every piece of legislation that comes before the Interstate Commerce Committee somebody comes in and says, "The language is all right, but I am afraid." Within the past year or so I have heard many persons before the Interstate Commerce Committee say, "That is all right, but I am afraid."

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the past few years people have been taught to be afraid.

Mr. WHEELER. The reason why some persons are so much opposed to some of the legislation we have placed upon the statute books in the past few years is not because of the way in which the legislation was written, but because of the way it has been administered and carried into effect by those who have been entirely incompetent for the jobs to which they have been appointed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I completely agree with the Senator's statement.

Mr. WHEELER. In my judgment, it is exceedingly unfortunate that progressive legislation should have to be carried out by those who have no conception of public duty. That difficulty has been present in connection with most such legislation. In the case of administrative bodies and bureaus which have been conducted by officials who have tried to administer the law in a constructive way, there has been little, if any, opposition to the legislation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is not afraid that under this bill we shall run into any synthetic tyrants?

Mr. WHEELER. No; because the Interstate Commerce Commission is one of the older commissions. It has seasoned representatives. It has men who are judicially minded, who have had long experience in regulatory legislation, and who as a whole have done a pretty good job.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that when counsel for the Lake Carriers' Association appeared before the committee he thought the language of the bill was a little too general. I asked him in what way it could be improved. He said, "We should like to have the bulk commodities named in the act." I asked him, as the hearings will show, to indicate the commodities which he thought should be exempted by writing them into the act. He suggested coal up the lake; grain, limestone, and iron ore down the lake. I said, "Is that sufficient?" He said, "Yes." I think we were discussing the commodities clause at the time. I said, "We now have the case of a carrier out of a Puget Sound port. Lumber is already exempted, but many things are processed from lumber. This carrier makes the suggestion that in order to take care of its situation we ought to write into the bill an exemption not only for lumber but also for paper." I asked counsel for the Lake Carriers' Association just how far we could go in writing into a general bill the names of the commodities which are to be exempt under this, that, or the other condition; and he said, "I don't think you can get anywhere by doing that. The bill as it is drawn is probably the very best you can do."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I still do not understand the Senator's explanation of clause 7. If it was intended to exclude the interstate contract carriers by water what difference does it make whether or not they compete with some bulk common carrier? The Senator suggests that they may be really common carriers; but, if they are, the Interstate Commerce Commission can find them to be so. There is ample law to determine who is a contract carrier and who is a common carrier. I cannot understand, if the clause means what the Senator says it means, why we should not omit the words beginning "which by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported," and simply provide that "nothing in this act shall apply to transportation of property by interstate contract carriers by water."

Mr. WHEELER. One of the reasons is that all contract carriers are not exempt from regulation under the bill. The bill regulates contract carriers. The only contract carriers exempted are those which by their very nature or the nature of the commodity transported are not competitive. We are trying to deal specifically with contract carriers upon the Great Lakes. Consequently, we wrote in that language for that purpose. They wanted to be taken out entirely, and not even have to go before the Commission.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me if they are interstate contract carriers they ought to be exempted. I understood the Senator to say he intended that they should be exempted. If so, why not so provide in so many words because it seems to me that the objection of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absolutely valid. One carrier might become a common carrier, and that it would immediately subject all other carriers to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with the Senator's interpretation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I told the Senator this morning that I would prepare an amendment, which I have done. The amendment meets the approval of the lake carriers' representatives. It would place at the end of subsection (b) on page 3 this proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to contract carriers by water of commodities in bulk on the Great Lakes and connecting waters whose vessels during the normal course of a voyage pass within the international waters between the United States and Canada and whose vessels compete in respect to any portion of such contract carrier's trade with water carriers of a foreign country.

I ask, Mr. President, that this amendment be printed. I imagine we may not reach it until tomorrow, and I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and his advisers consider the amendment overnight and, if possible, see if they cannot agree to accept it, because it is satisfactory to the Great Lakes carriers, I am certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me to answer the distinguished Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. REED. For 3 months I have listened to controversies between carriers of various kinds, including water carriers, inland water carriers, and common contract and private carriers. If Senators think there is no difference of opinion or distinction of interest between water carriers on the Great Lakes and the inland waterways and through the Panama Canal and those engaged in the coastal business they are mistaken. All one has to do is to sit down and try to perfect a bill such as the one now pending, and he will find the reason-and, to my mind, the complete reason-why the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio should not be adopted, namely, that there comes a conflict as to facts whether a carrier is a common carrier or a contract carrier, and the minute one carrier in any class is exempted by the terms of the bill, without giving the Interstate Commerce Commission some jurisdiction to determine the facts, we have defeated the purpose of the bill.

I am sorry that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Ship-STEAD] is not present at the moment, as well as some of the other Senators who have assumed that all is peace and harmony between the water carriers. Nobody knows better than the distinguished chairman of the committee that that is not so. Every class of carrier has alleged chiseling by other carriers classed the same as they were or alleged to be in their class. A majority of the water carriers over the inland waterways, coastal, and Panama Canal carriers that have come to me and talked to me in the last 3 months have been in favor of regulation. They have not always agreed on just the way it should be written, but we have done the very best we could to meet all situations that have been suggested. It would be impossible to meet the situation in the way the Senator from Ohio suggests.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield to me for just a moment, the Senator from Kansas realizes that there is a difference between contract carriers of bulk commodities in competition with foreign carriers and ordinary contract carriers. That is what I seek to cover by my amendment. I want to prevent an unfair competitive situation where Canadian carriers may come in and take grain, limestone, and iron ore trade away from American shippers. In my judgment, they could readily do that under the amendment which the committee has affixed to the bill, because the moment a common carrier competed with a bulk carrier under the bill as drafted, then such bulk carrier would come within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and its rates would be subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission's finding. I do not think that such a situation should exist, and I believe if the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Kansas will look over the amendment I have suggested they will find that it covers the situation.

Mr. REED. I am quite sympathetic with the point of view of the Senator from Michigan. The lake carriers brought this competitive situation to our attention, and we tried as best we could in the language of the bill to meet the situation. Perhaps we were not entirely successful. If we were not, speaking for myself alone, I am entirely willing to give the most thorough consideration to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

I think the Senator from Michigan, if he will permit me to say so, may have left a somewhat wrong impression as to the extent of the competition. A Canadian carrier may not compete between two United States ports.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that he is entirely right in that statement; but there can be of course a shipment from Duluth, Minn., to Port McNichol, Ontario, which is then transported by rail to New York, and so for the entire route from Duluth or Superior, or whatever the port may be, to New York City there is actual competition between the Canadian shipper by water plus an American railway.

Mr. REED. The committee was not unmindful of the very closely competitive situation on the Great Lakes and we have done the best we could to meet the situation.

Mr. BROWN. The committee has striven very ably to meet that situation, but I want by this amendment to make it certain that the situation which we fear will not arise. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will give the amendment most careful consideration.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan, I think, will agree that this question arises principally in connection with competition in the carriage of Canadian grain, in which American vessels may compete although Canadian vessels may not compete in the carriage of American grain directly between American ports; but, still desiring to give the lake carriers the fullest opportunity to compete, we tried to draw this bill so that they could do so.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Ohio that it is perfectly simple for any Senator to listen to argument presented by some interested carrier that wants to amend this proposed legislation, but in that way he only gets one side of it. In the case of the pending measure we did not take a particular contract carrier, but we had to figure how he competed with the common carrier and then we had to figure how he competed with another contract carrier. We simply had to work out the legislation not for one individual carrier or another, but on the basis of what was best in the interest of all the carriers. In order to do that we had to put some discretion in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

So far as I am concerned, with reference to this legislation, the contract carriers do not have any complaint. If they will trust the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commission will see to it, in my humble judgment, that they are treated fairly; that is all they are entitled to, and, so far as I am concerned, that is all they are going to get.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. For many years now we have been regulating rates on the Great Lakes. What abuse has arisen that gives rise to any need for regulation for the particular water transportation on the Great Lakes? They cannot possibly compete with the railroads anyway, or, at least, the railroads cannot compete with them. Has any serious abuse arisen that would require the regulation of the rates? I am asking for information. I do not know.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that I thought I had covered that point a half a dozen times. The same abuses exist upon the Great Lakes that are found any other place. There is on the Great Lakes the same competition with the railroads that there is in the Mississippi Valley and in other places. You may say, "What abuse has happened here and what abuse has happened there?"

Mr. TAFT. I never have heard the railroads complain to any considerable extent of the Great Lakes competition.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator has not heard of it, he would have heard of it if he had been chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. If the Senator had been on that committee for 16 years, he would have heard plenty of it, and I have heard it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me we ought to consider this legislation in a broader light than whether or not one system of transportation complains against another.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course we should.

Mr. NORRIS. After all, the real people who ought to be behind the legislation are the public themselves.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. They are scattered all over thousands and thousands of miles of territory. If we judge human nature as we know it to exist, it seems to me we must come to the conclusion that the same things that the railroads did to put water transportation out of business would be done, if possible, by men who operate trucks and men who operate river carriers or lake carriers or ocean carriers. It is human nature, if you have control of a situation, to get out of it for yourself all there is in it in the way of money.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Can it be possible that any Member of the Senate believes that the persons who now operate boats on the rivers, or who are going to operate them in the future, are devoid of the same selfishness that caused the railroads to take advantage of the situation for their own benefit? Will they not do just the same thing? Would not we do it if we had an opportunity?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not the truckmen do it if they had an opportunity?

Mr. WHEELER. Not only would they do it, but, as a matter of fact, they have done it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so; but the statement is very often made here, "Nobody has complained about this matter." The public have not been in a position to complain rightly. Are men shipping cargoes on the rivers the only set of men in the country who do not have the taint of human selfishness which exists in the breasts of all other men? Will they not do the same thing as other men if they have an opportunity? And how are they to be hurt if, even in advance of a complaint, we pass a law providing for regulation that is honest and just?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator's position is exactly correct.
Mr. NORRIS. I do not think we have any right to assume that the regulation provided in any law will be administered by dishonest men, or even by men who are not experts on the subject. They are going to do what they believe to be right. Can any honest shipper contradict that statement? Are not the public entitled to a regulation by which they will get the benefit of the cheaper transportation that water affords over railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any question about it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. WHEELER. If I may say just a word further before yielding, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft] says he has not heard of anybody wanting regulation of the water carriers on the Great Lakes. Let me say to him that some of the water carriers themselves have come before me and said they ought to be regulated. Frequently people do not like to come before a committee and testify to things that they will tell you privately. When Senators speak of the general public and ask, "Who has complained about this and who has complained about that?" many times Mr. Public, Mr. Farmer, or Mr. Somebody Else is getting cheated, and he does not know it; and even if he did know it, he would not know to whom to complain, and he would not come before the Interstate Commerce Committee to testify because he would not have the money to come here. But I say to you that in all of my experience in dealing with legislation I have never seen selfishness on the part of different groups in the same industry come to the surface any more than when this legislation came before our committee.

As I say, some of those affected by the bill do not want to be regulated; but the more decent people, engaged in shipping transportation upon the Mississippi River and upon the Great Lakes and also along the seacoast are in favor of suitable legislation. They have repeatedly said to me, "All we are asking for and all we want is to have our industry regulated by some fair and impartial body. We feel that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be fair and will be impartial. We do not want to be regulated by a body that on one hand is regulating ships and on another hand is taking money out of the Treasury and donating it to certain people while seeking to regulate the rates of their competitors."

As I say, we worked out this legislation, and we went just as far as we possibly could to be fair to all concerned.

Now, let me call attention to what took place.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to get too far away from the point about which I wanted to ask him.

Mr. WHEELER. I will not get too far away from it; but I desire to finish the thought I have in mind.

Every one of these persons first came before the full Interstate Commerce Committee and testified. We heard their complaints and we heard their lawyers. After that a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY 1, and myself went over in detail every single objection that was made in the committee. Sometimes we went over the objection twice. Sometimes we went over it three times. We called in the experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we called in the experts of the Maritime Commission, we talked with everybody we could possibly find who was qualified to advise us on the matter, and we spent weeks and months in the committee room, both morning and afternoon. After we have done that, and have worked out the matter the best we could, of course some of those affected by the bill are going around and appealing to individual Senators and saying, "Can you not have the measure amended upon the floor?" While there are some amendments that we have considered and are going to accept, if the bill is to be amended upon the floor to any great extent we are going to have a bill that will not be worth the paper it is written upon, because it is an impossibility to frame legislation properly in that way.

It has been proposed that the bill be sent to the Commerce Committee. That, I am sure, is because those who wish to have that done do not understand and have not given sufficient study to the provisions of the bill. If the bill should go to the Commerce Committee, that committee would have exactly the same pressure that has been put upon us for 3 months, and it would be a physical impossibility for them to get the bill out of the committee in less than a month or 2 months. They could not do it and at the same time give a fair hearing to all the persons who want to be heard about the bill.

I know that some of the lobbyists are sitting up in the galleries; and because they did not get everything they wanted before the Interstate Commerce Committee, after having had all the hearings they asked for, they are going around and appealing to individual Senators to amend the bill.

If the Senate wants to emasculate the bill, of course, it may do so. I have not any interest in the legislation. I am simply trying, and the other members of the committee are simply trying, to carry out what the President of the United States has repeatedly said ought to be done and what the Interstate Commerce Commission have said ought to be done with reference to the water carriers, and what the Committee of Six have said ought to be done with reference to the water carriers.

I do not know anything about water carriers except this: A few years ago, when I was opposed to the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause, some of my enemies said I probably had some interest in some ships, and that was the reason I wanted to protect the shipping industry and was against the railroads. Now, of course, the same crowd is saying, "What Senator Wheeler is seeking to do is to protect the railroads and put the ships out of business." I say that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman], and the other members of the subcommittee have worked harder on this piece of legislation and have devoted more time and work to it than has been devoted to any other piece of legislation that has ever come before the Interstate Commerce Committee since I have been a member of it, including the utility holding company bill; and we spent a great deal of time on that measure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. In reply to what has been said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], I desire to say that I agree that all forms of transportation for the carriage of freight and passengers ought to be regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not agree with the view that there should be no regulation of the rates upon the Great Lakes; but the situation with respect to the carriage of iron ore, grain, coal, and limestone differs from the general situation in this respect:

Canadian operators of great steamship lines are in direct competition with American lines which carry those commodities. If we could regulate the Canadian lines—and we cannot—and compel them to charge the same rates that are charged by the American lines, I should agree with the Senator from Nebraska; but we do not attempt to tell the Cunard-White Star Line what they shall charge for the carriage of freight between New York and Liverpool, and the British do not attempt to tell the American lines what they should charge between those two ports. There is direct competition there; and the only way I know of regulating it is either to leave the matter to competition or else to establish some kind of an international tribunal to regulate the traffic.

I am not alone in my views upon this subject. In the letter which Commissioner Eastman wrote to Representative Lea, the chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, he said there are contract carriers such as those carrying iron ore, coal, and grain in common-carrier service on the Great Lakes which could be relieved from regulation without harm. In other words, when it comes to competing with Canadian lines, we have to give our shippers the same advantages and release them from any of the impediments from which the Canadians themselves are released.

In the Canadian law governing shipping upon the Great Lakes the bulk carriers are expressly exempted when they are in competition with American shippers. So I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that, while I agree with the general view he and the Senator from Montana have expressed, that there ought to be regulation of all carriers of freight and passengers, when we come to competition with foreign shippers and foreign carriers, I do not see how we can apply that principle.

Mr. NORRIS. Do we come in competition with foreign carriers in transportation which does not go abroad?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator—Mr. BROWN. I had not concluded the remarks I was making along that line.

Mr. WHEELER. I have been very patient; I have permitted other Senators to interrupt me and to make speeches, but I have been on my feet for 4 hours and I wish to conclude my remarks.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say to the Senate that from the time I was a boy up until 15 or 20 years ago the carriage of passengers and package freight upon the Great Lakes was a great business. In it thousands of sailors were employed. They do not operate now because we regulated our carriers and the Canadians did not regulate theirs in the same way.

I am pleading, therefore, not for the carriers particularly, but I am pleading for thousands of Michigan sailors who are employed upon hundreds of ships which carry bulk freight on the Great Lakes. If we once put them under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission-and we will if the bill is enacted as it is now before the Senate-we will drive that business away from American bottoms and turn it over to Canadians.

Mr. WHEELER. I am afraid the Senator has his figures slightly exaggerated when he says 10,000 sailors on 300 ships.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps that is the reason why they do not carry passengers; they have too many sailors and the ships will not hold any more people. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I call attention again to the provisions of paragraph 8:

Whenever it shall appear from complaint made to the Commission or otherwise that the rates, fares, regulations, or practices of water carriers engaged in transportation to or from a port or ports of any foreign country in competition with interstate common car-riers by water or interstate contract carriers by water, cause undue disadvantage to such interstate carriers by reason of such competi-tion, the Commission may relieve such carriers from the provisions of this act to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner as in its judgment may be necessary to avoid or lessen such undue disadvantage, consistently with the public interest and the policy declared in section 1 of this act.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. One moment. If that does not take care of the matter, I do not know what we could write into the regulation, unless we say to them that there is to be no regulation at all.

There are four classes of water carriers. They are the carriers on the Great Lakes, on the inland waterways, on the coasts, and in the intercoastal area. We have four different groups of waterways.

I do not wish to take any further time on this particular subject. We have discussed it backward and forward, and I have covered it a dozen times, and the Senator will have an opportunity to offer his amendment, and we will discuss it further at that time. I wish to proceed now to some other matters in the bill.

There has been a great deal of agitation throughout the South and to some extent throughout the West, but I must confess that the western section of our country has not been so aggressive, in my judgment, as it ought to have been, with reference to discrimination on account of freight rates. Of course, the West enjoys many commodity rates, and because of them has not fought class rate discriminations as vigorously as it might have. We have inserted in the bill the language of a resolution which was offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], a paragraph which provides as follows:

Sec. 52. The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to proceed immediately, in such manner as it deems advisable in the interest of a correct ascertainment of the facts, to investigate the rates on manufactured products and raw materials between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory, and to like rates within any of such territories maintained by common carriers engaged in transportation subject to this act, for the mon carriers engaged in transportation subject to this act, for the purpose of determining whether such rates are unjust or unreasonable or unlawful in any other respect in and of themselves or in their relation to each other, and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist: Provided. That the Commission in its discretion may confine its investigation to such manufactured products and raw materials and the rates thereon as shippers thereof may specifically request to be included in such investigation. cifically request to be included in such investigation.

The Members of the Senate will recall that particularly throughout the South there has been a great deal of discussion and much dissatisfaction, the people in the South contending that there are preferences and that they are discriminated against. The same charge has been made by many in the Western States.

There are some who would like to see specific legislation directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to do certain things; but the more thoughful and the more moderate with reference to this matter have asked that an investigation be made by the Commission. As the matter was first proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama it applied to manufactured articles only, but those of us of the West wanted it to include raw materials. If the Commission will make such an investigation, I am sure it is bound to learn that some of these discriminations exist, and I am sure that the Commission will correct them. If it does not, and if the investigation is not broad enough to make the Commission correct the inequities, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be in favor of passing more drastic legislation than merely providing for an investigation of the matter in order to correct the discriminations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAFER in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield. Mr. CONNALLY. I am very much interested in the Senator's statement. The particular section to which he is referring does not do more than call the matter to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission. 'Is not that true?

Mr. WHEELER. It goes further than that. Mr. CONNALLY. It does not give them any additional authority.

Mr. WHEELER. The language is:

For the purpose of determining whether such rates are unjust or unreasonable or unlawful in any other respect in and of themselves or in their relation to each other, and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist.

Mr. CONNALLY. "Any unlawfulness" does not reach the matter at all, because I assume the rates are now lawful in the sense that they are put into effect legally. The point I wish to stress is that the Commission already knows the facts, the Commission already knows everything the investigation is supposed to reveal. But this practice is an overhang from the practice followed by the railroads long before the Interstate Commerce Commission was created, when they made regional rates on the theory that a sparsely settled country did not produce traffic, and therefore the rates should be higher. When the Interstate Commerce Commission came into being the railroads continued right along with the same old practice. These sparsely settled areas are not heavily populated, and the same old practice continues.

I have talked to the Commission about this matter. They know now the conditions we are going to ask them to ascertain. But they have the old idea that nothing can be done unless someone files a complaint, the respondent is served with a citation, and an examiner is sent out, after a year or two, and by the time the case is finally adjudicated, the commodity has either dried up or blown away and there is no occasion for changing the rate.

I had hoped the committee would give the Commission a modest command to do something after they find the facts. because there is no doubt on earth that many areas, particularly in the great Southwest, from which I come, are suffering greatly from rates out of our territory which are prohibitive, so that the people there cannot compete successfully with others in selling what they originate, whereas frequently the rates into our territory are much less for the same mileage on the same commodity than when the commodity is leaving our area for another area. That is not fair; it is not right; it is not just.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree entirely with the Senator. It is not only in the section from which he comes-

Mr. CONNALLY. I know that. I am merely citing my section because I know more about it.

Mr. WHEELER. The people of my State and the people of the Northwest generally, particularly of the inland territory, suffer just exactly as the people in Texas suffer, if not to a greater degree.

I call attention also to section 6, pages 26 and 27, which

UNDUE PREFERENCE AND PREJUDICE

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point.

Then we have added the words "region, district, territory," which are to be found at the bottom of page 26 and the top of page 27.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is at least some progress.

Mr. WHEELER. The previous provision with regard to "discrimination" simply referred to discrimination as to "locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point" without specifying the region, district, or territory. So we felt that by broadening the language we would at least take away that excuse, and we would provide expressly that the Commission should not discriminate in its rate structures. The Commission is directed to proceed immediately. Perhaps it will not mean anything to the Commission, but, as I said a mcment ago, if what Congress says does not mean anything to the Commission when we pass legislation, then so far as I am concerned I am willing to have Congress pass more stringent laws. At the present time, however, I feel that as far as we could go would be to direct the Commission to investigate, and then to put into effect any orders necessary, and then to broaden the other section with reference to unjust discrimination.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator has said, section 52 must be read in connection with section 6, which specifically makes unlawful any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage as between regions, districts, and territories. Then, after making that unlawful, section 52, as the Senator said, directs the investigation, and it goes further and directs that the Commission shall enter such orders as may be necessary to remove any unjust, unreasonable, or unlawful rates.

In that connection let me say that my distinguished colleague the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], who is very much interested in the subject and who sat with our subcommittee for several days helping us to work the matter out, himself introduced a resolution, which, as I recall, is more or less substantially the provision which is written in the bill. I am sure the resolution was not any stronger in any way than is the language now written in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I also wish to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to something which the Senator from Alabama already knows, that recently the President of the United States appointed a new Interstate Commerce Commissioner. He is the author of a study on freight-rate discriminations. The State of Alabama now has two Commissioners on the Interstate Commerce Commission, and both of them are there, as I understand, because of the request and suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. I congratulate the Senator upon the influence he now has, and I am sure that with these two added Commissioners from Alahama-

Mr. HILL. And one from Texas.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not sure that there are not two from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. That would be cause for comment.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Unquestionably this matter will be straightened out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that I was not complaining. I was only hoping that the committee would go further. I introduced a resolution which did not go any further than the language of the bill. But I had in mind the Interstate Commerce Commission and wanted to introduce something that I thought the committee would adopt. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Hill] for his very great enterprise and industry in pressing the matter, and it was largely because of his service as the chairman of the subcommittee that the item went into the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. CONNALLY. He held long and exhaustive hearings. I congratulate the committee on what was done. But still I am fearful that this is not going to be sufficient. When I spoke about the Interstate Commerce Commission I did not mean that the Commissioners were indifferent, but, like many others, they get into a rut. They know the condition exists, but they say, "Under the law we consider only cases in which complaint is filed."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me ask the distinguished Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be very happy to answer the

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator from Texas desires that the bill be made stronger?

Mr. CONNALLY. In that respect.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator suggest that we write the bill strong enough so as to remove the regional division of the State of Texas, which has been maintained by the Texas State authority for 70 years, since Texas established a railroad commission, and a distinguished United States Senator, John H. Reagan, resigned from the Senate to become chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, one of the early railroad commissions in the country? From that day to this the State of Texas by State authority has divided its own State into two regions, known as "common point" and "differential territory." In the "differential territory" they charge a higher rate than they do in "common point" territory. There is no difference in principle between what Texas does by State authority-a continuing practice throughout the years-and what the Interstate Commerce Commission

Would the Senator from Texas desire that we make the law sufficiently strong to require the State of Texas to remove the regional distinction which it maintains by State authority within the State of Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have never heard the Senator from Kansas make a stronger argument than he has by citing the precedent in my State. Of course, I did not mean to imply that all these regions should be done away with, but I did mean that the differentials between the regions in many cases are outrageous.

Mr. REED. I may say that in rate cases I have heard those living in the "differential territory" in Texas make as bitter complaint over the distinction between their rates and the rates in the "common point" territory as I have ever heard made in any Interstate Commerce Commission case.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be true. There is no doubt it is true. But that does not answer the question.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. In that regard I wish to support the point made by the Senator from Texas by a brief quotation from the hearings of the subcommittee, from the testimony of Mr. Bee. of Oklahoma City, formerly with the corporation commission. I read from page 330, as follows:

In the territory east of the Mississippi River the rate is 87 cents per 100 pounds. For a similar distance in zone 1, which is central and northern Missouri, the rate is $1.06 per 100 pounds.

In zone 2, which comprises southern Missouri and eastern Kansas, the rate is $1.22 per 100 pounds. In central Oklahoma, which comprises zone 3, the rate is $1.34 per 100 pounds. And in that portion of Oklahoma and Texas west of the one hundredth meridian roughly speaking the rate is $1.53 per 100 pounds.

ian, roughly speaking, the rate is $1.53 per 100 pounds.

I direct specific attention to the fact that in eastern territory the rate was 87 cents, while in western Oklahoma it would be $1.53 for an equivalent haul.

There is the difference thrown out in strong relief of 87 cents for 100 pounds hauled 300 miles just over the Missouri River, as against $1.53 in western Oklahoma and Texas. And that is the point I am sure the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Alabama had in mind in the proposed amendment. I wish to say to the Senator, who has worked so hard on this matter, that our only interest is to be sure that that condition will be changed.

As the Senator from Texas has well pointed out, that situation has existed for years. Of course, the Interstate Commerce Commission knows that already. If we trust only to their generosity or to their feeling of justice I fear that it will not be changed. But we hope that the bill will contain such mandatory language as to bring about a change.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I have generally found that when the Senate and the House pass a measure, even though we do not direct the Commission positively to reduce the rate, yet the Commission recognizes that we are the policy-making body and they generally try to rectify these matters. As I understand, the Commission has a case pending before it at the present time, and is going into some of the very matters to which the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Alabama, and the Senator from Oklahoma have called attention, and I am of the opinion that some of these matters may be straightened

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has been very kind to yield to me. He has been on the floor nearly 4 hours now, and I do not want to detain him much longer. Is it not true that as a legislative matter there is no way for the Congress to write a statute directing the Interstate Commerce Commission, or for that matter any other commission, to reduce rates? The rate structure is so complex and so complicated that if we were to sit around a desk today and try to write language by which to direct the Commission to reduce certain rates we would find it almost impossible to do it.

Mr. WHEELER. It would be absolutely impossible to do it. Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In connection with this discussion, and in view of what the Senator from Alabama has just stated, that the freight-rate structure of the country has, like Topsy, just grown up through the years, is it not desirable that there be established some kind of a rational freight rate-making principle, either by the Congress or by the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other agency, so that there shall be something of rationality about the structure?

The impression I have is that throughout the years, perhaps because of some kind of pressure or some kind of good fortune or because of one influence or another, certain areas have gained distinct economic advantages over other areas because they had a particularly favorable freight-rate structure. That simply meant that the whole economic direction was in favor of one community and against the growth of some competing community in a similar field.

I wonder if it is not also within the ambition of the chairman of the committee and the committee that there may be something like equality for the whole country with respect to transportation facilities and transportation rates. In other words, should not every section of the country be allowed to develop economically according to its own merits, rather than through the fortunate instrumentality of a freight-rate structure which makes it possible for one section to grow and makes it obligatory that another section shall forever be retarded in its opportunity to grow?

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for his contribution, and I agree with him, of course. Various freight-rate structures grew up because of the fact that big shippers or localities received favorable treatment. There was discrimination against certain localities. That was one of the reasons why we created the Interstate Commerce Commission. Frankly, I feel that the bill is not perfect; but I think it is a very long step in the direction of accomplishing some of the things which all of us want to see accomplished with reference to national transportation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is it the expectation of the committee that by the amendment in section 52 the rates in the various classification territories will be equalized or made the same in different territories?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think that is possible. Mr. FRAZIER. I do not see how it is possible. I was wondering what the intention was.

Mr. WHEELER. It is not possible for a number of reasons. For example, it costs more to carry freight over the mountains in two trains than to carry it on the plains in one train. Likewise, we must recognize the fact that railroad transportation service and rates depend somewhat on the intensity of the traffic. In long stretches of territory with no traffic. shippers must pay more for railroad service than do shippers in a densely settled part of the country where traffic is plentiful and where there is much competition from busses, trucks, and things of that kind. However, it seems to me from my study of the question that apparent inequalities ought to be corrected.

I have gone into the question somewhat particularly as a result of agitation by many persons from the South who have called my attention to it. The question has also been called to my attention by many persons in the West. I am hopeful that the investigation will result in benefits to the people of North Dakota and the Middle West, and likewise that it will result in benefits to the Southern States, which have been discriminated against.

Mr. FRAZIER. In North Dakota we have a large volume of wheat to transport in the fall of the year, and because we have that large volume, and because our territory is practically level, we have a rather beneficial rate on wheat as compared with some other territories. Our railroad commission and traffic experts are afraid that the provision to which reference has been made will take that special rate away from us.

Mr. WHEELER. I believe this provision will help the people of the Senator's State rather than harm them in many respects.

Mr. FRAZIER. We have a much lower rate than prevails in many other sections of the country. If rates are to be equalized, it will mean raising our rates.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill does not mean that rates are to be equalized. The Senator's section of the country now enjoys a special rate because of the peculiar circumstances of the traffic. The reason why that section of the country did not have such a rate in the past was because of favoritism. The people of the Senator's State might just as well disabuse their minds of the fear that as a result of the bill they will lose any benefit which they now have. I should also like to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the low rates the people of his State presently enjoy are largely commodity rates. This bill contains nothing that would necessarily disturb them. The South, like the West, is fighting the class-rate discriminations at which sections 6 and 52 are aimed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one further very brief statement?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. A moment ago the able chairman of the committee referred to the freight rate being affected by the density of the traffic in the area served. It seems to me that any transportation system must in the first instance be a national transportation system.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. It must adequately and effectively serve the whole country. It seems to me that an adequate transportation system should not inflict a higher cost upon a given area to haul a given commodity through a given distance than is paid in some other area. I ask the Senator if it is not desirable in the public interest, in order that the large cities shall not always remain large and the small country towns always remain small or sparsely populated, that there be some adjustment so that the national transportation system, as such, will have a degree of adequacy for the whole country, and so that the small community, just because it is a small community, may not be penalized in its effort to grow

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that the committee, and especially the subcommittee, have had that very question under discussion. The next provision to which I shall call attention is one which was insisted upon by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I have been told that the provision is socialistic. When I am told that it is socialistic I reply that it was put in the bill at the insistence of a conservative Republican from the State of Kansas.

The provision is as follows:

Provided further, That whenever the Commission is of opinion, after hearing upon general application of carriers in any rate area or territory or group, or in the country as a whole, or upon its own initiative, after hearing, that increases in rates, fares, or charges should be permitted upon a percentage or other uniform basis because of the revenue needs of the affected carriers, considered collectively, it may provide for the pooling or division of the avails of such increases, or any part thereof, among the affected carriers so as to enable, to the extent reasonably practicable, each of them to afford adequate transportation service, giving due consideration, among other things, to the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers.

Mr. PEPPER. Does that language suggest the principle of the recapture clause?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. It is the principle of the recapture clause.

There have been about eight general increases in railroad rates. When the Interstate Commerce Commission permitted the last general increase in rates, it pointed out that to raise the rates of some of the railroads, particularly in certain districts, was against its conscience, or something to that effect; but that because of the fact that other railroads needed more money there was nothing it could do but to raise the rates generally.

In the event of a general increase in rates, the bill seeks to take away the increase which would ordinarily accrue to the wealthy railroads and distribute it among the poorer and weaker roads. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Back in 1920 I was a member of the House committee which wrote the Transportation Act. One of the most controversial points in the conference, after the two Houses had acted, was the recapture provision.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. At the time I very much doubted its constitutionality; and for that reason and one or two other reasons I voted against the bill. However, the Supreme Court held that provision to be constitutional. What has been the result of the recapture clause in the Transportation Act of 1920 so far as assisting weak railroads is concerned?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever, because the recapture clause did not work. In my judgment, the administration of the pending legislation will be very difficult. I must be frank and say that it will be difficult for the Interstate Commerce Commission to say what it will do with the money taken from some roads. The recapture clause was in effect for some period of time. Then it was repealed. Its repeal was recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, by many of the State commissions, and by the railroads themselves. It was said to be unworkable.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that some of the money was impounded until the Supreme Court passed upon the question.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose it was returned to the companies from which it was collected.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. The theory is that whenever a general rate increase takes place the Interstate Commerce Commission should have authority to say, "Here is a road which really does not need more money. Why should rates to the shippers be raised in order to give more money to this road if it does not need it?" In many instances rates are raised to help weak roads. The railroads are constantly talking about a national transportation system and unification. I must say that some of them are opposed to this particular provision, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator referring to the provision which requires a certain part of the money to be put in a pool and turned over to the weaker roads?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.
Mr. McKELLAR. The money is taken from the stronger roads and turned over to the weaker roads.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think this body has already passed on that question. Did we not repeal the recapture provision?

Mr. WHEELER. We repealed what was called the recapture clause

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall that clause, it was substantially the same as the proposed provision.

Mr. WHEELER. It was somewhat on the same order. As I just stated to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY],. the recapture clause went into effect in 1920 and remained in effect until 1933, when we repealed it. It was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court in two different cases. the Dayton and Goose Creek case and the New England Divisions case. Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think the bill would be much better if that provision were left out. I doubt whether the roads which by reason of superior management, greater efforts, better judgment, and higher skill, or for other reasons, are able to make more money than the weaker roads should be penalized, and the poor roads which do not make such efforts should be given a premium for their lack of effort.

Mr. WHEELER. I am becoming a little weary, but I wish to call attention to the provision in question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wanted to call attention to the views I had about it.

Mr. WHEELER. A Senator informed me that he would have an amendment to offer to this provision, and at that time we will consider it. In going over the bill I wanted to call attention to its various provisions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question there?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that in the previous act one-half of the excess was to be used for loans or for other purposes to help the weaker roads, and the other half was to be devoted to another purpose. What provision does this bill make as to the excess? Is it left in the discretion of the Commission? Mr. WHEELER. It is left in the discretion of the Commission to be distributed among the weaker roads.

Mr. REED. To be distributed among all the roads.

Mr. WHEELER. I may say that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] is the one who drafted this provision, and he is much more familiar with it than am I, and when the time comes he will discuss it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I inquire if hearings on this amendment were held by the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. BYRD. I have been reading the hearings, and I cannot find anything in the hearings in relation to it.

Mr. WHEELER. No hearings were held by the committee on this point. We considered the matter, as I recall, in subcommittee. It was taken up by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I remember. As I recall, the Interstate Commerce Commission really drafted the language.

Mr. BYRD. The Interstate Commerce Commission has not gone on record as favoring it, has it?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think it has, although I do not

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the language of this amendment was drafted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the amendment has been recommended by the Commission through its legislative committee. I shall be very happy to address the Senate regarding it at an appropriate time.

Mr. BYRD. Has it been recommended by the Commission as a body or merely by one or two individual members?

Mr. REED. It has been approved by the legislative committee of the Commission, and it was approved on the recommendation of the President's committee last year. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Montana I should like to have an opportunity to make a statement to the Senate upon this important matter before it closes its mind.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that opportunity will be afforded.

Mr. BYRD. What I want to make clear is that there were no hearings before the committee; and in support of that statement let me say that the chairman of the committee stated in the hearings that this particular matter would not come up. He said:

It is not going to be done-not at this session of Congress,

That was said with respect to this mandatory pooling arrangement.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not know that I made that statement in reference to the pooling provision. I think the Senator will find I made that statement with respect to another question. I think that was with reference to the commodity clause, because the only time I said it was not going to be done was when we had up the question of the commodity clause. There was a great deal of controversy over it, and I said then they need not worry over the commodity clause because it was not going to be taken up, and we would not pass upon it at this session of Congress.

Mr. BYRD. It was in connection with the testimony offered by Mr. J. V. Norman, who asked the question whether or not the monetary pooling provision would come up.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no recollection of having said what the Senator quotes, but I may have said it.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask another question. Has the Committee of Six approved this particular provision?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know that they did; I do not think they recommended it.

Mr. BYRD. I should like the chairman of the committee to make clear to the Senate that the Interstate Commerce Commission as a body, as the Senator from Kansas intimates, has not recommended this provision. My understanding is that the chairman of the Commission recommended it and one other member, but not the Commission as a whole or a majority of the Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. I will read what was said by the Commission in its report to the other House.

We believe, however, that the proposed amendment to paragraph (1) would be more adequately worded if changed to read as follows:

"(1) That except upon specific approval by order of the Commission as in this section provided, and except as provided in paragraph (16) of section 1 of this part, it shall be unlawful for paragraph (16) of section 1 of this part, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this part to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other such common carrier or carriers for the pooling or division of traffic or of gross or net earnings, or of any portion of traffic or earnings; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling or division of traffic or earnings as aforesaid each day of its continuance shall be a separate offense: Provided, That whenever the Commission is of opinion, after hearing upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this part. the transportation of passengers or property subject to this part, or upon its own initiative, that the pooling or division, to the extent indicated by the Commission, of their traffic or gross or net earnings, or of any portion of traffic or earnings, including all or any portion of general increases in rates authorized by the Commission, will be in the interest of better service to the public, or economy in operation, the Commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize, or require, such pooling or division, under such rules and regulations, and for such consideration as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions. tion as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be found by the Commission to be just and reasonable in

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is a question of personal privilege with me now. The Senator from Virginia rather indicated-I do not think he intended it that way-that there may be involved a question of bad faith in the inclusion of this provision.

Mr. BYRD. What I said was that my information was that the Interstate Commerce Commission as a body has not approved this amendment. That is my information. If I am incorrect in that, I should be glad to stand corrected. I am asking the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce if the Interstate Commerce Commission approved this particular amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Montana to state whether or not at the time of the approval of this bill as reported to the Senate there was not a meeting of the whole committee at which all matters were discussed and whether this provision was in it.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not catch the question.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I never questioned whether or not this particular provision was in the bill when it was approved by the whole committee. What I said was that my information was that the Interstate Commerce Commission had not approved this particular amendment.

Mr. REED. My answer to that is that the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, of which Joseph B. Eastman is Chairman and which communicates with either or both Houses of Congress upon legislative matters of this kind, has approved this principle, and the language included in this section of the bill is precisely the language drafted by somebody connected with the Commission—the legislative committee or somebody else. Certainly, I did not draft it, and it has the approval of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission which speaks for the Commission.

Mr. BYRD. Has the legislative committee the right to speak for the entire Commission on all matters of legislation?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so. I do not think it was submitted to the full Commission.

Mr. BYRD. My information is-and if I am not correct I want the Senator from Kansas to correct me-that this particular amendment has not been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a whole.

Mr. REED. In response to the Senator I will say that, so far as my knowledge of legislative action goes, I do not recall an instance of the full Interstate Commerce Commission having been called upon to approve or disapprove any bill pending in either House. I would not want to go so far as to say that there has been no such case; but certainly, having had considerable familiarity with such matters, I can say that no case of that kind exists so far as my knowledge goes. The legislative committee is selected by the Commission and acts for the Commission in giving either House of Congress advice upon bills.

Mr. BYRD. Was a letter written by the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce favoring this particular amendment?

Mr. REED. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so. Let me say that, of course, the Interstate Commerce Commission do not always agree with measures which are introduced, and the fact that they do not agree is not always convincing to me. I like to have their approval when I can have it; but if I come to the conclusion, or the committee comes to the conclusion, that the Interstate Commerce Commission are wrong we do not follow their advice. Frequently, for instance, I think the Congress of the United States has made a mistake in following blindly whatever proposals for legislation commissions send to the Congress.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator's statement.

Mr. WHEELER. After all we are the policy-making body and not the Commission.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator about that, but the practicability and the workability of this amendment should be passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The chairman of the committee has just expressed a question in his mind as to whether or not it is a practicable and workable amendment to accomplish the results it contemplates, just as in the case of the recapture clause.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the recapture clause did not accomplish the purpose, and the Commission itself recommended the repeal of that clause. As to this provision, as I have said, the Senator from Kansas has given a great deal of study and thought to it, and when the time comes he will go into it, no doubt, in considerable detail and discuss it. I hope Members of the Senate will keep their minds open until such time as they may have an opportunity to hear the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 2 or 3 minutes? I desire to discuss this matter.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and the other Senators that we spent 3 months in the committee in preparing a bill on this subject, and the Senate has devoted all of today to it; and our consideration has been given to the agencies of transportation. I think the shipper who pays the freight is entitled to a break; he is entitled to a chance, along with the railroads and the trucks and the waterways.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the desire of the able Senator from Kansas to discuss this important provision of the bill this afternoon? If so, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum; or the matter may go over until tomorrow. What is the pleasure of the Senator?

Mr. BYRD. I hope this subject will go over until tomorrow.

Mr. REED. I desire to say, for the benefit of the Senators who are present, that we have been discussing a number of things from the standpoint of whether they pleased the railroads or whether they did not; whether they dealt thus and so with the water carriers or whether they did not; how the truckers looked upon things, and so forth. I want to bring into this picture the shipper who pays the freight; and this is one of the two or three possible provisions in this 206-page bill that go to the burden that may be put upon the shipper. I shall be glad to have a quorum present when I discuss this question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BARKLEY. A moment ago the Senator from Kansas privately said to me that he desired to speak following the Senator from Montana, whenever he should conclude. I did not know how long that would be, but I imagined we would continue in session until nearly 5 o'clock. The Senator from Kansas will not want to begin his remarks then, so whatever the Senator's pleasure is about the matter is satisfactory to me.

Mr. REED. May we have an agreement that this will be the unfinished business in the morning?

Mr. BARKLEY. It will be.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am going to conclude in just a moment. I may say that there are some provisions of the bill which I should like to analyze, but they are not very controversial.

We have put in the bill a provision regulating private car companies. Private car companies have been a means whereby some of the railroads have been milked and, really, rebates have been given. A few of the railroads have been opposed to the regulation of private car companies, but the great majority of the railroads themselves favored it, and in the subcommittee we put in the provision for their regulation. Some persons appeared before the subcommittee who suggested that we put in such a provision, and I think it is going to be a very healthy and a very fine thing for the railroads.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Texas. Mr. CONNALLY. Under the bill as now drawn, will the Commission have adequate control and authority over the Pullman Co., for instance? On some lines, instead of the Pullman Co. paying the railroads for hauling their cars, the railroads pay the Pullman Co. for the privilege of hauling their cars. Is that matter within the province of the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. The regulation of those rates is within the province of the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time. We put in the bill, for instance, the following provision:

It shall be unlawful for any carrier by railroad or express company subject to this act to make or enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement with any corporation, company, firm, or person regardless of ownership providing for the furnishing to or on behalf of such carrier or express company of (a) protective service against heat or cold to property transported or to be transported in interstate commerce, or (b) any type of cars for the transportation of property in interstate commerce, or for any carrier by railroad or express company to continue after January

1, 1940, as a party to any such contract, agreement, or arrangement, unless and until such contract, agreement, or arrangement has been submitted to and approved by the Commission as just, reasonable, and consistent with the public interest.

I may say that representatives of some of the weaker roads of the country came before the subcommittee and said they thought this provision would be of great benefit to some of the smaller and weaker roads of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him a second time.

Mr. WHEELER. That is all right.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is there anything in the measure which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission authority over the equipment companies and others that are supposed to be subsidiaries of the railroads, and make tremendous profits out of selling them their cars, their equipment, and things of that kind?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that during an investigation of railroad finances we heard a great many rumors to the effect that some of the equipment companies were milking the railroads. Some individual would come to us and tell us that that was so. We sent out investigators and tried to run down those rumors, tried to get some proof of their correctness, and did the very best we could; but I am frank to say to the Senator that we were not able to put our fingers upon any specific thing of that kind.

There is not any question about the fact that some years ago a great deal of that sort of thing was going on. Some of it may be going on at the present time; but, if so, it is covered up in such a way that we were unable to uncover it. We had in our employ some of the best men in the country who know how to investigate railroads, and we were not able to find proof of abuses of that sort.

I was told that in the case of one railroad which happened to be in receivership there was some evidence of contracts of insurance being written which were afterward canceled by the receivers when the matter looked shady. The contracts had been entered into just before the road went into the hands of receivers, and I was told that the railroad saved a considerable amount of money on that particular transaction. It is frequently charged that this and that is the case, but we were unable to find any definite proof along that line.

Then I may say that in several ways we have modified the present law to facilitate and expedite the work of the Commission. One complaint that has been made by the railroads with reference to the fourth section is that if they wanted to reduce their rates to meet water competition, or some other competition, an unduly long time elapsed before the reduced rates were permitted to go into effect. We have amended the fourth section so that when the railroads make their application the rates shall go into effect at once unless they are suspended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they have the power to suspend them. We also recommend the repeal of a portion of the old fourth section which the Interstate Commerce Commission had recommended to be repealed, and which the railroads had asked to have repealed; namely, the equidistant clause. The Interstate Commerce Commission says the clause is pretty nearly unworkable; that it is very expensive and very difficult to put into effect; and to that extent we have lessened the burdens upon the railroads.

We also set up a transportation board. Complaint has been made by the railroads that the busses and trucks are being subsidized by reason of the fact that the Government builds roads. The busses and trucks dispute that statement and say that we are subsidizing the railroads. We have put in the bill an amendment providing that an independent transportation board shall be set up for the purpose of studying that question.

The provision reads as follows:

(2) It shall be the duty of the board to investigate—(a) concerning the relative economy and fitness of rail carriers, water carriers, and motor carriers for transportation service, or any particular classes or descriptions thereof, with the view of determining the service for which each is especially fitted or unfitted and for which its use should accordingly be encouraged or discouraged in the interest of avoiding wasteful and destructive competition.

A study is to be made and a report made to the Congress of the United States of their findings.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator state the number of that section?

Mr. WHEELER. It is section 53. This provision was recommended by the Committee of Six. In fact, they went much further than the full committee did; but this particular provision met with no opposition from either the busses or the trucks or anybody else. We wanted to have an impartial investigation made, and so we took that particular matter away from the Interstate Commerce Commission; and the authority is limited to a period of 2 years.

There may be other minor changes we have made which I have not called to the attention of the Senate, but I think I have discussed the important things. Tomorrow I hope we may dispose of the committee amendments, and then I hope we shall be able to dispose of the bill in a very short time.

In conclusion, I say, as I said at the beginning, that this bill is not a panacea for the railroads. In my judgment it is not going to do all that some people hope it will do for the railroads; it is not a perfect bill, but it is as nearly perfect as the subcommittee and the Interstate Commerce Committee itself could make it after nearly 3 months of intensive study, both morning and afternoon. Five or six members of the committee have done nothing else during that period but devote practically their entire time and attention to the bill.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, with the understanding that I will have the floor tomorrow morning.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 22, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the gift of Thy Son, for the patience of Thy love, and for the guidance of Thy spirit. O Thou who has trod the path of prayer, teach us how to pray and take us unto Thy loving heart. The desert blossoms as the rose, and springs break out in the parched ground when we walk with Thee. Oh, may the inner light never fail and our feet never falter in the way. So pervade our hearts as to sanctify our failures and give us confidence for the work we have yet to do. Grant that our ministries today may lead us to thoughtful obedience to Thy will; may we feel the challenge of an earnest call to help our day and generation in every holy thing. Unto Thee be eternal praise, world without end. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 19, 1939, was read and approved.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I had planned to place a petition in the Well of the House today on Resolution 189, a resolution to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from further consideration of H. R. 2, and asking the Rules Committee for a rule, but I have now decided to wait until the House meets tomorrow.

There are a few Members of the House and other interested parties who have had very little regard for the word of the leaders and members of the Ways and Means Committee and who urged the petition method long ago. For the benefit of those skeptics I wish to say that I have a copy of the call for the meeting of the Ways and Means Committee for tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock to consider H. R. 2 and H. R. 6378. I have the word of Chairman Doughton that by the time the House meets tomorrow we shall have action one way or the other, and I wish to say further that I have had a conference with Dr. Townsend this morning and he has authorized me to say that he feels that it would be better strategy to wait until tomorrow to file the petition.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program for the day, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? There was no objection.

THE VISIT OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF ENGLAND

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, Great Britain has once again decided to send to the United States so-called ambassadors of good will. While we are always ready to receive with true American graciousness any representatives of a recognized foreign government, it is well that we remember not to be overwhelmed by the presence of royalty and not to throw caution to the winds.

It would be well for the United States to remember the history of the world for the past 20 years. This is particularly true of the diplomatic history of Great Britain. The diplomatic policy of Great Britain both before and since the World War makes the political philosophy of Machiavelli seem angelic or divinely inspired. Every nation with whom Great Britain has made treaties or has offered the hand of friendship has soon found that they were at the short end of the bargain. This Nation, which has the temerity to call itself one of the great democracies, does not inform the world that with all of its boasted freedom it does not allow a Jew or a Catholic to be its ruler, despite the fact that the Jews and Catholics have fought its wars for hundreds of years and the House of Rothschild has saved the Empire on many occasions.

During the past year the Members of this body can remember that in the succeeding European crises Britain told Austria, Czechoslovakia, Albania, and the other affected nations that she would stand by them until the bitter end. Each time she let them down. It finally reached the point that where nations were threatened by the dictators they became afraid that Britain might offer her help. They knew that if this happened they were doomed.

For 450 years they kept in a practical state of slavery the people of Ireland. In the last few years they have given to Ireland a measure of freedom but have compelled that nation to pay them $50,000,000 in tribute; yet Great Britain has no hesitancy in repudiating her debt of over $5,000,000,000 to the United States.

During the World War she guaranteed to the Jewish people that if the war was successful she would establish and protect a Jewish homeland in Palestine. She allowed Jewish regiments to fight in the Palestine sector during the World War, and at its termination announced to the entire world that she would keep her word and establish forever a new home for Zion. Hundreds of millions of dollars were spent by the Jewish people to reclaim the desert and to establish one of the most progressive communities that the world has ever seen. Then when the tree of Palestine has borne its fruit and has developed into a flourishing state Britain once again repudiates her agreement and decides to leave the Jews defenseless against the ravages of the semisavages of Arabia.

Now she extends the hand to the United States. Let us beware! England is threatened on all sides, but we Americans are determined that we shall not spend American blood nor American money in the defense of a nation who has only thought of herself throughout her entire history. We have resolved that it is not safe for our people to become entangled with another nation whose diplomatic policy has been so flagrantly dishonest throughout the pages of history.

Let us welcome the royal guests as such, but let us strengthen our determination to resist the offer of alliance either actual or implied. Let us remember Czechoslovakia, the history of Ireland, the $5,000,000,000 war debt, the plight of the Jews in Palestine, and, above all, the thousands of Americans who lie dead in the fields of Europe who fought that England, and England alone might live.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an address delivered by the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General, at the State convention of the Missouri Chapter of the National Association of Postmasters at St. Louis, Mo., on the 12th of May last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AMERICA MUST KEEP OUT OF WAR

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, several days ago I inserted in the Congressional Record a speech made on the battlefield of Verdun by the Duke of Windsor. I have received letters from all over the United States commending that effort, but not one criticizing it.

So intently are the American people and all other Christian peoples of this world bent on keeping us out of another war that even newspapers that formerly opposed this attitude or were silent on the subject are now coming out in its support.

During the World War Mr. Viviani, from this platform, said of those men who went down at Verdun that, except to those who loved them, their names disappeared with their bodies.

Today from their voiceless lips there comes no protests, but their blood cries out from the ground against another such conflict.

The men who made the sacrifice, the women who shed the tears, and the toiling masses who must pay the debts are not going to see this world plunged into another World War if they can possibly prevent it. [Applause.]

The following editorial is from the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News, a paper whose policies are usually at variance with mine, but on this point it certainly expresses my views. If the victims of the last war could only speak and make themselves heard, there would be no war.

The editorial referred to follows:

THE DEAD DO NOT SPEAK

Nobody knows how many men lie buried near the spot at Verdun where the Duke of Windsor made his appeal for peace.

It is certainly not less than 600,000. It may be nearly a million. These are the men to whom Windsor referred when he said, "I am deeply conscious of this great company of the dead, and I am convinced that could they make their voices heard they would be with me * * *."

Their voices are heard no longer. Some became silent in February of 1916, when the German attack began. Each day, as the attack swelled to its crescendo, more and more men became silent, swelled to its crescendo, more and more men became silent, frequently as many as 10,000 between sun and sun.

The supreme German assault did not come until July, when the gray green waves swept down from the Douaumont ridge, across the ruins of what had been the village of Fleury, to pile up in horrid windrows against the inner girdle of forts. The mud swallowed up the living and the dead—"pure de cadavres," or corpse soup, the grim French called it.

In October it was done all.

In October it was done all over again, the French retaking the captured fort of Douaumont. Longer and longer rows of men became silent.

The great French ossuary at Verdun now commemorates 400,000 French and Allied dead. The German dead must have been almost as great.

as great.

And, as we generally believe, they are silent, they do not speak any longer. Great stretches of the hills about Verdun lie bare and naked even today, and not even weeds will grow amid the 20-year-old scars of one of the most monumental battles of history.

We say they do not speak any longer, these nameless dead whose strong young bodies were alive one day and food for quicklime the next. And yet—

Window was well eduised in his choice of words as always. He

Next. And yet—
Windsor was well advised in his choice of words, as always. He said, "* * Could they make their voices heard * * *."

They do speak, these dead. They speak with eloquence beyond words and beyond speech.

It is we who will not hear. Coarsened by the years of brutalization that followed the World War, our ears are not attuned to the message from the ossuary at Verdun.

Behind the peace appeal of the exiled British prince, once himself, as circumstances permitted, a soldier, there is a vast unearthly murmuring, a soundless sound of men calling from another time and place.

It is not that these dead do not speak. We will not listen. That is the world's tragedy.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein an editorial from a southern newspaper on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an inspiring address delivered yesterday by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

THE ROAD AWAY FROM REVOLUTION-WOODROW WILSON'S LAST MESSAGE TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein a statement made by Woodrow Wilson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to reread recently the last message to the American people penned by Woodrow Wilson, an article entitled "The Road Away From Revolution," which was published in the Atlantic Monthly for August 1923, some 6 months before the noble spirit of the great war President was wafted to the realm of eternity. We know that during all his life Woodrow Wilson was a student of history, and deeply interested in social and economic reform, and many of the principles and ideals of the New Deal and President Franklin D. Roosevelt are very similar to those embodied in the new freedom which he advocated in the campaign of 1912. It is quite generally recognized that if the World War had not interfered and required Woodrow Wilson to devote himself almost exclusively to international problems that he would have dedicated his great talents and energies to bringing about social justice and economic security in these United

The article to which I have alluded sets forth important facts and the profound ideas of one of the deepest students of history and lovers of mankind who has ever lived and we would do wisely to consider and be guided by his opinions at this time if we are to avert national disaster. It reads as follows:

THE ROAD AWAY FROM REVOLUTION (By Woodrow Wilson)

(By Woodrow Wilson)

In these doubtful and anxious days, when all the world is at unrest—and look which way you will, the road ahead seems darkened by shadows which portend dangers of many kinds—it is only common prudence that we should look about us and attempt to assess the causes of distress and the most likely means of removing them.

There must be some real ground for the universal unrest and perturbation. It is not to be found in superficial politics or in mere economic blunders. It probably lies deep at the sources of the spiritual life of our time. It leads to revolution; and perhaps if we take the case of the Russian revolution, the outstanding event of its kind in our age, we may find a good deal of instruction for our judgment of present critical situations and circumstances. circumstances.

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION

What gave rise to the Russian revolution? The answer can only be that it was the product of a whole social system. It was not in fact a sudden thing. It had been gathering head for several generations. It was due to the systematic denial to the great body of Russians of the rights and privileges which all normal men desire and must have if they are to be contented and within reach of happiness. The lives of the great mass of the Russian people contained no opportunities but were hemmed in by barriers against which they were constantly flinging their spirits, only to fall back bruised and dispirited. Only the powerful were suffered to secure their rights or even to gain access to the means of material success.

It is to be noted as a leading fact of our time that it was

It is to be noted as a leading fact of our time that it was against "capitalism" that the Russian leaders directed their attack. It was capitalism that made them see red; and it is against capitalism under one name or another that the discontented classes everywhere draw their indictment.

THE CAPITALISTIC SYSTEM

There are thoughtful and well-informed men all over the world who believe, with much apparently sound reason, that the abstract thing, the system which we call capitalism, is indispensable to the industrial support and development of modern civilization. And yet everyone who has an intelligent knowledge of social forces must know that great and widespread reactions like that which is now unquestionably manifesting itself against capitalism do not occur without cause or provocation and before we commit ourselves irreconcilably to an attitude of hostility to this movement of the time, we ought frankly to put to ourselves the question, Is the capitalistic system unimpeachable?, which is another way of asking, Have capitalists generally used their power for the benefit of the countries in which their capital is employed and for the benefit of their fellow men?

THE EVILS OF EXPLOITATION

Is it not, on the contrary, too true that capitalists have often seemed to regard the men whom they used as mere instruments of profit, whose physical and mental powers it was legitimate to exploit with as slight cost to themselves as possible, either of money or of sympathy? Have not many fine men who were actuated by the highest principles in every other relationship of life seemed to hold that generosity and humane feeling were not among the imperative mandates of conscience in the conduct of a banking business, or in the development of an industrial or commercial enterprise?

And if these offenses against high morality and true citizenship have been frequently observable, are we to say that the blame for the present discontent and turbulence is wholly on the side of those who are in revolt against them? Ought we not, rather, to seek a way to remove such offenses and make life itself clean for those who will share honorably and cleanly in it?

THE ROAD AWAY FROM REVOLUTION CLEARLY MARKED

The road that leads away from revolution is clearly marked, for it is defined by the nature of men and/or organized society. It, therefore, behooves us to study very carefully and very candidly the exact nature of the task and the means of its accomplishment.

The nature of men and of organized society dictates the mainte-

The nature of men and of organized society dictates the maintenance in every field of action of the highest and purest standards of justice and of right dealing; and it is essential to efficacious thinking in this critical matter that we should not entertain a narrow or technical conception of justice. By justice the lawyer generally means the prompt, fair, and open application of impartial rules; but we call ours a Christian civilization, and a Christian conception of justice must be much higher. It must include sympathy and helpfulness and a willingness to forego self-interest in order to promote the welfare, happiness, and contentment of others and of the community as a whole. This is what our age is blindly feeling after in its reaction against what it deems the too great selfishness of the capitalistic system.

SPIRITUAL REDEMPTION IS ESSENTIAL

SPIRITUAL REDEMPTION IS ESSENTIAL

The sum of the whole matter is this: That our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ and being made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that spirit. Only thus can discontent be driven out and all the shadows lifted from the road ahead.

THE FINAL CHALLENGE-THE NEW DAY

Here is the final challenge to our churches, to our political organizations, and to our capitalists—to everyone who fears God or loves his country. Shall we not all earnestly cooperate to bring in the new day?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the National Grange Monthly by Fred Brenckman.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered before the Philadelphia Patriotic Luncheon Club on May 18, 1939, by our former colleague and former chairman of the Committee on Rules, John J. O'Connor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Washington Post this morning by Roger W. Babson.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include excerpts from the Congressional Record and topics from the papers of today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, out in the Rockies, in the so-called open spaces, there is an old expression, often used, which is, "Let us take five." To us it means to reflect and meditate before taking action. To me it means just that, "take five"; and in the observance of it I am better prepared to protect my State and the people in their rights, as proclaimed in amendment 10, and which I have obligated myself not to belittle or treat lightly. If all Members would accept their oath of obligation sincerely and in its full meaning, their responsibility would stand out clearly and distinctly.

The Federal Government was created by the States, and can, therefore, be impeached by the States. It is the duty of each State to protect its industries and its people against all enemies, even from the Federal Government itself, and the time has arrived for such action. This can be done peacefully by convening the legislatures in all the States for repeal of the seventeenth amendment. That will restore the sovereign rights of the States and a representative republican form of government, as proclaimed in the Constitution. If this is not done, we are bound to end as a totalitarian state with a dictator or a despot for ruler.

To perpetuate a republican form of government—our Government—it is necessary that one legislative body represent the States and the other the people. The Constitution provided for this by naming the Senate as representative of the States and the House as representative of the people.

The adoption of the seventeenth amendment in 1913 changed our Government from a democratic Republic to a degenerative democracy. This change in the Government is the cause for the present confusion, illness, and poverty.

Before 1913 two Senators were elected by the State legislature to represent the State. The Senate represented all the United States and, with the House of Representatives, the United States in international relations. Congress was the "ruler," responsible for the Government to the States and the people. We started with real statesmen, but we have finished with "rubber stamps."

It is well to remember further that the Federal Government was created and organized by the States, as an aid to them and to the people, not as a vindictive monster of destruction to them.

The Senators and Representatives are now elected by direct vote, and therefore responsible to the people alone. This leaves the country without a responsible head, and is a weakness now used to bring about our destruction. The invisible government planned it so, and have employed the Third Internationale to help in carrying out the plan. This invisible government does not spend its own money for this but uses, instead, the taxpayers' money, appropriated by Congress. It is because of this that I have said anything may happen, for Congress is too busy looking after communistic front organizations, the so-called "liberals," to be of any value to

The President is now the Chief of the Army, Navy, and all intelligence and policing units, which is an absolute power in a democracy. He may, when conditions are favorable, take charge of the Government, in spite of Congress. For the past 10 years, greater and greater power has been turned over by Congress to the President, and the Reorganization Act of 1939 is about the last power Congress could bestow upon him. He can now appoint, promote, and shift anyone in any position favorable and important to This is very important and a great aid for complete control of the Federal machinery when he takes command. The master stroke to complete conversion of the Government is mobilization; but for that there must be a reasonably good excuse, in order to allay suspicion. I do not say this will happen, but I do assert the stage is set for such control.

To provoke mobilization or war, newspapers and publications speaking for the invisible government, has headlined war. The nations selected for this propaganda furnish the best evidence for identification of the invisible government. I have said before that the United States has absolutely no reason or cause for war in Europe. We have nothing at stake in property, and our people's lives are not jeopardized or threatened; so common sense should set this matter straight. Our own people in the United States do not want war, and Congress itself is opposed not only to war, but to all agitations and belligerent publications provocative of war. This should be clear to those who constantly preach Nazi hatreds and boycotts against European nations. The word "Nazi" is a myth, for there is no government in Europe or anywhere else of such designation. All European governments are so-cialistic, based upon the Marxian philosophy. The only difference between them is the type of people in charge of the governments. Of all these European socialistic states, Russia is the most vindictive and cruel, yet nothing is said in the invisible government's subsidized press about atrocities in Russia. A good example of Russia and the character of the people who are in control has already been demonstrated in mass executions, which have shown no regard for human life. It is further evidenced in suppression of Christian churches in Russia, and destruction of churches and life during the red regime in Spain.

A recent example of Russian ruthlessness may be found in an article, from which I now quote:

(New York Enquirer, Monday, May 15, 1939): Beseech Stalin to spare lives of red flyers. Signers of Paris petitions plead for Kokkinaki and Gordienko. Paris, May 14. Hundreds of copies of a petition asking Josef Stalin and the Soviet Government to spare the lives of Gen. Vladimir Kokkinaki and Maj. Mikhail Gordienko, Russian flyers who failed to complete the Moscow-New York flight, is understood here that Stalin is furious over the flyers' crack-up on the Nova Scotia coast and frequent reports are heard to the effect that he suspects Kokkinaki and Gordienko of being counter-revolutionaries who deliberately brought their plane down before their New York destination was reached. The flyers are now returning to Europe on the Ile de France.

Word reaching here from New York indicates that in that city and other large American cities similar petitions to Stalin, favoring sparing the lives of Kokkinaki and Gordienko will be started.

Now, observe the difference; when our aviators are lost, we send the fleet out to look for them. When the Russian aviators are lost or crack-up, as these two gentlemen did, fear is held that they may be executed, because their ship failed to carry them through. If we had the same government in charge in the United States similar attempts would be made upon us-and would we like it? You answer the question.

It is not easy to understand the propaganda constantly poured out in the press, and when I read articles like the one I quote below, from the Washington Post, Friday, May 19, 1939, I wonder what it is all about:

Representative Dies links General Moseley to race intolerance drive. Letters quoted by Congressman, who says Officer South to enlist support from Army reserves.

Dies, whose committee has taken testimony in a session yesterday which was surrounded with extraordinary secrecy, made public a letter which he said Moseley, former Fifth Corps Area commander in the Army, had written to a New York National Guard officer. The letter, which Dies announced was part of his committee's record, said in part:

"The fact is that the most serious problem confronting America dear is that the problems of the letter and how to get rid of his today is just this problem of the Jew, and how to get rid of his influence definitely—locally, nationally and internationally."

Another letter, alleged to have been written by Moseley to a reserve Army captain, said:

If the Jews bump me off, be sure to see that they get the credit for it from coast to coast. It will help our cause.

Such articles create race hatreds and should therefore be suppressed.

I am not acquainted with General Moseley, or the other gentlemen mentioned in the Post article, but I am reasonably sure that all of them are sincere and patriotic Amer-

I do not believe they are particularly opposed to any race, as this article states, but are instead bitterly opposed to socialism and communism. I am also opposed to the Government's tolerance toward communism, concerning which everyone in Washington is informed. The Socialists and Communists have "bumped off" hundreds in Russia and they have also "bumped off" many in the United States. must not forget that attempts were made on the life of Representative McFadden, now deceased. I, therefore, do not blame anyone for leaving enough evidence in different places to expose the gang that is here, so that the patriotic citizens may in due time drive them into the ocean. The Communists are here and the Federal Government knows it. Why look for other groups that do not exist and use them for a smoke screen to cover up un-American activities with which nearly everyone is familiar?

If the F. B. I. gets orders to apprehend those who are Socialists, Communists, and those connected with subversive organizations, no doubt the most astonishing revelation would be forthcoming. Yes, information which may set the Nation afire when the truth is out.

It is now up to the Dies committee to hold public hearings and question the gentlemen who have been mentioned in our daily papers. If the hearings are private, the witnesses should be allowed to employ private stenographers to check testimony, so that there will be no diversion to protect the higher-ups. Let us get this thing straight now, in common defense and for the general welfare of the United States. Article III, section 3, should not be used for whitewashing, but only as it reads.

I have never held and do not hold malice toward anyone. because of their beliefs, creed, or race. As a Member of Congress, I am interested in the safety of the Republic and in the security and protection of all the people, regardless of creed or race. I am, therefore, opposed to all un-American activities and to all legislation which deprives our people of their liberties and rights. It is because of this that I have always been and will always be opposed to the Gold Reserve Act and the money power granted to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. It was one of the most reprehensible pieces of legislation ever enacted by any legislative body, because of its injustice to our own people. Why should our people be deprived of gold, the international standard security for all money? Why should our people be left with a commodity and unsecured dollar? Why should our Government deprive our own people of the ownership of gold money and gold securities, and then turn around and bestow the same rights, of which we were deprived, to foreigners and foreign governments? Why should the President and the Secretary of the Treasury be allowed to use $2,000,000,000 in gold without even giving an accounting for the use of it? If this $2,000,000,000 had been used to retire the public debt, a 5 years saving at 2 percent would have amounted to $200,000,000. It is my sincere opinion that every Member of Congress who has the welfare and the interest of the people at heart should oppose extension of the monetary power to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. The vote on this measure should set the people at home right, as to those who are for and against them. Those who are for the people will vote "no" to the extension of this power to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

If any of you are interested in discovering the identity of "him who planned it so," read Philip Dru Administrator and Gabriel Over the White House and you will discover the hand of Colonel House. Do not forget destruction of our Government has been planned for a long time, but strenuously since 1912, and especially during both Democratic administrations.

The power of money is the greatest power of all and so recognized in Asia thousands of years ago. The money changers came from Asia, and they are largely instrumental in the control of the invisible government, and the ownership of $15,000,000,000 in gold now in the United States. To maintain this power it is very important that the invisible government control all governments in which they operate. Hitler saw this and recognized their hand in the inflation which wrecked the German Government, and for that reason drove the money changers out from the temple. It is for that reason he is hated by the invisible government.

Greed for gold is a national blight. Gold, of course, is necessary and useful but only when held as security for all people. When gold is held, owned, or controlled by a small group it becomes a national menace and it is for that reason I advocate return to the gold standard, so we may enjoy a more equitable distribution of our own property.

The invisible government buys the Communists, Socialists, and the liberals, and use them for pawns to do their bidding. as they have done for a number of years. These "rubber stamps" or victims of hypnotism have been led up to the peak and shown the richness of Egypt, and will eventually bump their nose when they fall off their perch.

A persistent minority can always destroy a popular government such as ours, so we cannot afford to tolerate the Socialists or Communists in our midst, particularly if they are the underground workers for the invisible government. had hope that the Members of Congress would understand this so as to better realize their responsibilities, not only to their people but also to themselves. It does not take a smart man to realize that we are heading pell-mell for destruction. and it should require less intelligence to understand that all the rubber stamps which have been used for the past 10 years will be left on the city dump, where they rightfully belong. The sad part is the ending, because it will entail suffering to the innocent as well as the guilty.

In closing I cannot help but to call attention to the closing hour on House Resolution 6392. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks] introduced an amendment to the bill to protect and provide home markets for the Nation's agricultural production in the North, South, East, and West. This amendment unfortunately was incorrectly worded, yet by simply erasing the word "not" its purpose would have been served. For some reason or another the Chair did not allow this correction, I presume because of rules, and so our Nation's farm industries were left in the same place where they have been for 7 years—on the plowed up rows of their impoverished farms—waiting for a market. I voted "present" as a protest against stupid and asinine rules, particularly those used by the House when they want to railroad legislation and sell the Nation "down the river."

I am hopeful, however, that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] did not mean the following:

I think, for the Record, is is well to call the situation to the attention of the Members of the House. Let us all hope that later on we will see at least a little more intelligence displayed on the part of our Republican friends to carry on in a more statesmanlike and dependable manner. If this is a fair sample of legislation we are to get from our Republican brethren, may the good Lord help us.

The absurdity of this criticism may be fully appreciated when we bear in mind that the Democratic majority in Congress since 1930 is responsible for enacting the greatest mass of unconstitutional legislation ever enacted before in Congress. It is my desire to go even a little further than that and to say that the legislation enacted is not only unconstitutional but it is contemptible and despicable, because it has betrayed our people. It has sold our Nation's industries and business "down the river" to bankruptcy, a most unforgivable offense against any popular government and a people who have cheerfully paid all the Government expenses since the inception of the Republic—a people who are still paying for their own destruction by a Government they have nourished and fought for since it came into being.

The gentleman from South Carolina should bear in mind that a massive, legal structure and our mania for laws are not signs of intelligent statesmanship. It is instead evidence of dumb statesmanship. The most conclusive evidence of poor statesmanship is the condition in which we find ourselves today. That should convince even the gentleman from South Carolina that there are no statesmen in control of the Government.

I cannot comprehend the indulgence and tolerance of our people in submitting quietly to congressional incompetence. In using the word "incompetence," I only repeat opinions as expressed by Members themselves when the Reorganization Act of 1939 was before the House. It is now time for the people to arouse themselves and get busy. The time is now at hand when the people must strike at the Communist and the Socialist or else be struck down themselves.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, as the author of the Zionist resolution for a homeland for Jewish people in Palestine, which passed the Congress by a unanimous vote and was enacted into law in 1923, I urge that there be no retreat, surrender, or compromise with the British betrayal of the promises and pledges given in the Balfour resolution. There can be no compromise with such a perfidious proposal to repudiate her plighted word.

I hope that the Zionists all over the world will not yield to this proposed breach of trust in order to cajole the Arabs and promote the interests of the British Empire by doublecrossing the Jewish people in Palestine and selling them out for a mess of pottage in return for Arab support elsewhere.

I urge the President, the State Department, and the Congress to demand that there shall be no modification of our treaty rights in Palestine without our consent. I shall be glad to urge in Congress immediate and favorable action on any appropriate resolution to this effect.

The proposed disgraceful and shocking repudiation of the Balfour pledges, under which vast sums of money have gone from America to Palestine to rebuild and establish it as a place of refuge for hundreds of thousands of Jewish people of Central Europe must be vigorously opposed. There never was a time when there was more need for such a homeland. There must be no compromise, otherwise all past efforts will have been in vain.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an article by Raymond Clapper, which appeared in the papers of the country under date of May 20.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on May 19, after the motion to recommit was offered, I am quoted in the Record as follows:

Mr. Rayburn. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so may I state that I was a Member of this House for 12 years when the Republicans were writing the legislation, and, having as long a memory as that, I am somewhat surprised at the motion to recommit that was offered this afternoon.

What I did say was, "I am not surprised at the motion to recommit," and so forth.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, Judea is still the promised land. Since the Balfour declaration of 1917 Great Britain has been promising to go forward with the program for "the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people." While there was promise, there was yet hope, despite all the heartache and disillusionment that has ensued since Palestine became a British mandate in 1923. But today, after the release of the most recent White Paper by the British Government, even the promise is gone and a Jewish homeland seems doomed.

How quickly are promises forgotten. How casual is national ingratitude. During the World War, when German submarines were coursing the seas and plundering British shipping, and when German armies were menacing the very existence of Great Britain, she scoured the world to enlist the financial and physical resources of the Jewish people in the allied cause. The Jewish people responded. It was in pursuance of this aid that Lord Balfour made his declaration in 1917, stating that the Government of Great Britain looked with favor upon the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine.

The matter was of more than casual interest to the people and to the Government of the United States. When Palestine became a British mandate in 1923 by action of the League of Nations, the United States concurred in the understanding to make Palestine a Jewish homeland and approved a treaty which recited its support of this understanding. General rejoicing sprang from the belief that the establishment of this homeland for Jewish people was definitely under way. In the last 20 years, 400,000 Jewish immigrants and millions of dollars have poured into Palestine to transform it from ashes and disease into a vibrant land.

Jews throughout the world watched the steady development of this promised homeland. They saw pestilence wiped out. They saw schools and hospitals constructed. They saw thin, neglected lands converted to orchards and golden fields of grain. They saw hope and ambition and enthusiasm transform ancient cities into modernized places of abode. They saw gradual fruition of a slender and persistent dream which has endured through the centuries. Then they saw hope reduced to ashes.

In 1937 came the Peel Commission of the British Government to recommend partition of Palestine into a Jewish state, an Arab state and a British corridor. In 1938 they saw the Woodhead commission return a confused and anomalous report which recommended partition of Palestine and in the same report admitted the impossibility of a feasible and workable partition. All this while the hope of Jewish people burned dimly, but it burned.

Now, in 1939, that hope is all but extinguished by the White Paper of last week, which proposes a Palestine state for both Arab and Jewish people to become an independent state in 1949. The death stab to Jewish hope of a homeland is found in the provision that Jewish immigration to Palestine shall be limited to 15,000 persons annually for 5 years, and thereafter the number of Jews shall be limited to one-third of the population.

to one-third of the population.

Thus is hope of homeland decimated. Thus does Britain, for political considerations, renounce the promises of the Balfour declaration of 1917. Thus does the sacrifices of the Jewish people in marshaling every financial and physical resources on the side of Britain in 1917 meet the reward of ingratitude 22 years later.

Sixteen years ago, when the mandate over Palestine was given to Great Britain, the people and the Government of the United States labored under official assurance that His Majesty's Government would proceed under the sentiment of the Balfour declaration that a Jewish homeland would be established in Palestine. The recent White Paper and the proposal which it makes violates that assurance, and I, as a citizen of the United States and as a Member of Congress, protest such action by the Government of Great Britain.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record and to include therein an address delivered on May 10 by the Honorable Fred K. Nielsen, formerly with the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Gearhart]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a speech by J. Edgar Hoover at Nashville, Tenn., on May 20.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. Lemke asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an address on A Tribute to Motherhood by H. S. Roberts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Guyer]?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a brief editorial on Farm Power—Alcohol.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a resolution of the Council of the Borough of Pitcairn, Allegheny County, Pa., opposing the Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDowell]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a resolution adopted by the Grand Lodge of Wilmington (Del.) Order of the Sons of Italy and America, representing 15,000 Italians in the city of Wilmington, Del., asking that the United States take no part in European affairs,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Williams]?

There was no objection.

Mr. Ludlow asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a brief excerpt from the records of the Continental Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein an editorial headed "Moscow-Led Communism Endorses the New Deal." This editorial was sent to me by a Jeffersonian Democrat. It is from the New York Journal-American of Tuesday, May 16.

Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to place editorials in the RECORD, but since the majority leader and the ones in power are not trying to keep out editorials, possibly this would be a good thing for them to see. For that reason I should like to see it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, until the gentleman and his committee function, of course, I am not going to make any objection.

Mr. RICH. We cannot get that committee to function. I am more anxious than the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, that it will do so.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—may I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Congressional Record is the one free press we have left in which both sides can be presented. I believe in Members exercising their prerogatives and arguing both sides of every question that comes up. For that reason, I have advocated using the Congressional Record freely.

Besides, we already have the men employed in the Printing Office and have the machinery. All it costs to print an extra page is the cost of a little ink and paper. So I am in favor of letting the gentleman from Pennsylvania carry on his campaign for economy, that he has waged for the last few years, even though he has to borrow an editorial from a Moscow paper, was it?

Mr. RICH. No; it is a New York paper. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the gentleman makes the statement we have no free press in this country. The New Deal, I am sure, will close them all up when it can, so be careful and beware. It is certainly making a dictatorship out of our Government; and with a dictator you cannot have free speech, free press, or freedom of any kind. I am for American freedom, therefore against the New Deal.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Randolph].

THE PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE & WASHINGTON RAILROAD CO.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5680) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. to extend its present track connection with the United States navy yard so as to provide adequate railroad facilities in connection with the development of Buzzards Point as an industrial area in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1932 (Public, No. 187, 72d Cong), and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Philadelphia, Baltimore, & Washington Railroad Co. to extend its present track connection with the United States Navy Yard so as to provide adequate railroad facilities in connection with the development of Buzzards Point as an industrial area in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1932 (Public, No. 187, 72d Cong.), be amended by striking out the words "One-half Street SW, One-half Street SE., and Second Street SW., south of Potomac Avenue and north of Potomac Avenue to P Street", and inserting in lieu thereof "One-half Street SW., and Second Street SW., south of Potomac Avenue and north of Potomac Avenue to P Street, and One-half Street SE., south of Potomac Avenue and north of Potomac Avenue and north of Potomac Avenue to O Street."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this measure is merely to permit the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. to extend its present track connections on One-half Street north of Potomac Avenue from P to O Streets.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSOLVENT BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4434) to provide for the abatement of personal taxes from insolvent building associations in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever and after any building or homestead association, which was incorporated or doing business under the law of the District of Columbia, has ceased to do business by reason of insolvency no tax on personal property, either tangible or intangible, shall be levied, assessed, or collected by the District of Columbia against or from such association if such tax shall diminish the assets of such association necessary for the payment of the full amount due on share accounts in, or on shares of, such association to the holders thereof, and such tax, if heretofore levied, shall be abated as against any such associations as are or have been found by the Comptroller of the Currency to be insolvent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF BEER ON CREDIT BY RETAILERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 5137) to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia, and request its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 35 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "No holder of a retailers' license shall purchase beer on credit."

"No holder of a retailers' license shall purchase beer on credit."

SEC. 2. (a) So much of section 18 of such act, as amended, as reads as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the sale of alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages and the reasonable extension of credit therefor by a manufacturer to a wholesale or retail licensee," is amended to read as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the sale of alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages and the reasonable extension of credit therefor by a manufacturer to a wholesale or retail licensee if the purchase by the retailer would not constitute a violation of section 35."

(b) So much of section 19 of such act, as amended, as reads as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the reasonable extension of credit by a wholesaler for merchandise sold to a retail licensee for resale as herein permitted," is amended to read as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the reasonable extension of credit by a wholesaler for merchandise sold to a retail licensee for resale as herein permitted if the purchase by the retailer would not constitute a violation of section 35."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this act shall apply only to beer delivered after 10 days after the date of the enactment of Mr. RANDOLPH (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that there are rules and regulations in the District under which no retailer can dispense intoxicating liquors within 500 feet of a church. Some mistakes have been made in granting requests for licenses for as this provision is concerned. Is there anything in this bill that will permit retailers to establish a place of business closer than 500 feet to a church?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I may say in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in the District of Columbia we have the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board which considers all applications for licenses. This measure would in no way change the regulations under which this board is operating at the present time. The sole purpose of this particular bill is to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District. The wholesalers have suffered heavy losses due to failure of retailers to pay valid bills and the committee feels this legislation is necessary. Similar measures are in force in adjoining States.

Mr. RICH. As I understand, the board will not permit the dispensation of alcoholic beverages within 500 feet of a church.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In answer to the gentleman's second inquiry, I may state that the board has adopted a 500-foot limit and is attempting to carry out this provision of the regulations.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman as mayor of the city will see that this provision is enforced and that no dispensaries of alcoholic beverages are located within 500 feet of a church.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will say in answer to the third inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, joining with the other members of that committee on both sides of the aisle, that we are attempting in every possible way to carry out the legislative functions in connection with its duty as a committee of the Congress.

Mr. RICH. We know the gentleman is making a good mayor, and we want to stand by the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman very sincerely. I shall try at all times to merit such confidence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition for just a moment, even though all the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia has been completed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the kind words of the gentleman from Pennsylvania cause me to make this observation to the House.

The Committee on the District of Columbia through its 21 members has the responsibility of dealing with matters which concern the District of Columbia. There are times when the matters that come before us bear indirectly, if not directly, on legislation of a national character. I feel it only fair and proper to say that this 21-member committee is giving close scrutiny to the measures that come before us. Last Saturday the Subcommittee on the Judiciary, with both Democratic and Republican members present, held a hearing on a so-called fair-trade bill that lasted well into Saturday afternoon. This morning at the regular meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia 19 of the 21 members were present and gave an hour and one-half to a discussion of the milk situation here and as it affects other sections of the Nation.

I believe the House would like to know that even though this committee is charged with a task which perhaps is not so pleasant, I have said that members, both Democrat and Republican, are working diligently. I want to express my gratitude for the high type of membership on the committee and for the careful attention these men are giving to the measures that come before them. I say this in deference to my Republican membership and to my Democratic membership. I can again assure the House that we shall attempt to bring before this body only legislation which has been most carefully considered. [Applause.]

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR WHEAT

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 248) to provide minimum national allotments for wheat.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to remind the House that these bills are being called up by unanimous consent heretofore granted by the House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this particular bill simply provides-

The SPEAKER. Is it the desire of the gentleman from Texas to have this bill considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 248

Resolved, etc., That the last sentence of section 333 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to the minimum acreage allotment for wheat), is amended to read as follows: "The national acreage allotment for wheat for any year shall be not less than 55,000,000 acres."

The SPEAKER. Under the previous agreement, the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas for 30 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this measure simply fixes the minimum allotment of the national acreage in wheat in the event a marketing quota is voted upon and adopted. We establish this as the lowest allotment that can be made. It is a very simple proposition and it continues the provision applicable to this year and makes it a permanent provision. I do not see why there should be any objection to it and, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand the law at the present time, in the absence of this type of legislation, the Secretary could fix an allotment, say, of 30,000,000 acres.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The formula is in the bill, but if a large supply of wheat were on hand it would drive the allotment down in some instances. It would not do it this year, but in some future years it might drive it down to the figure indicated by the gentleman from Michigan, and certainly much below the 55,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is, drive it down through the operation of the formula?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; through the operation of the formula.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say to the gentleman that I have prepared a suggested amendment fixing the base at 60,000,000 acres instead of 55,000,000 acres. Has the gentleman considered that or would the gentleman have any objection to that?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rather doubt the wisdom of that suggestion, due to the fact that conditions might arise under which it would be desirable to get the allotment as low as 55,000,000 acres in order to protect the wheat farmers. None of these quotas can be put into effect until two-thirds of those producing the commodity have voted to establish the quota system. I think last year the quota was around 60,000,000, and I believe this year the quota was placed at 55,000,000 by such a limitation as we have here; otherwise it would have been just below 50,000,000 acres. After all, the farmers vote on it; and if we put it at 60,000,000, under the present act, it might cause the price to be so much lower as to be unsatisfactory. I believe it would be wise if it were left at 55,000,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I believe I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell us how much wheat has been imported this year?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, I cannot; although there has not been a great deal. There are certain types of wheat, as the gentleman understands, that come in for milling purposes at certain seasons of the year; but the export wheat has been far above the incoming wheat.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows we are importing about 9,000 or 10,000 bales of cotton a month into this country?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There has been much ado made about that, but the importation of cotton has not been much in excess of normal importations of cotton. We always import a little cotton. I will state to the gentleman that there is a provision in the present act which enables that situation to be dealt with both on cotton and cotton products, if that should become necessary.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me our American manufacturers ought to use American cotton.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman. I noticed in the Record the other day that when we had up a provision that would have required the Post Office Department to use the American commodity instead of the foreign commodity, a good many of the gentlemen over on that side voted to use the foreign commodity.

Mr. RICH. You will find the gentleman from Pennsylvania interested in using American farm produce from top to bottom, just the same as I am in favor of protecting the American manufacturer and American labor by having a tariff that will protect all of our people, and the gentleman from Texas knows that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I state to the gentleman that I have the record vote and while the gentleman is not recorded as voting on the proposition, he is recorded as being paired against using American cotton and in favor of using Indian jute. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Let me say here that the gentleman will recall that a few days ago when a number of Members were not present to vote on the veterans' bill, they paired them all as being against veterans' legislation. It was a mistake. They had no more right to pair me against that bill than they had in the case of the veterans' bill. I gave no one the authority, nor did I request the pair. And I say here that I am for the use of American cotton and will do everything I can to help the American cotton grower, and I want to help everybody that is American.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I accept the gentleman's statement, and I congratulate him on that statement and on his position.

Mr. RICH. And I want that to be recorded in the Record.
Mr. JONES of Texas. All I had to go by, of course, was the Congressional Record, and I suggest that the gentleman have it corrected.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman for calling that to my attention, and I am not running out on any votes, either; and I ask that the permanent Record be so recorded.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. When the gentleman's committee was taking into consideration the allotment of wheat, the wheat quota, did he take into consideration new conditions that exist in the Middle West and the West? I am receiving numerous letters from people in my district—several from prominent farmers in my State, indicating that if we do not get rain in my part of Nebraska very soon we do not need to talk about quotas and allotments at all, because the small grain is practically gone now. How will this legislation affect my farmers if they lose part or all of their small grain by drought?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The conditions now would indicate that there will be no quota on wheat for this year. I am glad my friend asked the question. I may say that under the terms of the present act a farmer will receive his soil payments regardless of whether he produces a crop. They are based on normal and not actual production. We also have a provision for wheat insurance which is available to

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to get this into the RECORD. The condition of the small grain in my part of Nebraska is very serious, and I would like the members of the committee to be apprised of that situation, especially as it exists in my part of Nebraska. We are very short of moisture. The seed is not germinating, and the wind is blowing the seed out of the ground. I am alarmed over crop prospects in the third district of Nebraska.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And may I say one word more on the proposition that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] talks about. I appreciate the statement that he has made and thank him for it, but I noticed a few days ago when the question of Argentine beef was being so thoroughly discussed, that the gentleman, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin] said that notwithstanding the way the motion to recommit was worded, notwithstanding the fact that it would not accomplish what it was intended to accomplish, he voted for it as a matter of principle. However, I find in this same vote to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] refers, that when the question was up of using American cotton by our Department, instead of jute produced in India, my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts voted in favor of continuing to use jute. I will be interested to have him explain the difference in principle as applied to beef and the principle as applied to cotton. The gentleman is acknowledged to be a great legislator, but I should think that he should lift up his eyes and see across this whole country. Notwithstanding that, when jute and cotton are involved, he votes to use the products from abroad. O Consistency, thy name is not Joseph.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand the gentleman to take the position that everybody who voted against the cotton amendment is against farm legislation?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no; I made no such imputation. The point I make is that when gentlemen from the other side decry the use of a foreign commodity and then when opportunity is offered on another commodity on an exactly similar basis, it is strange, peculiarly strange, that they should say they would take the foreign commodities in one case and insist on the native commodities in the other case. I agree that we should purchase American commodities for all of the departments.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, my friend from Texas is having a little fight with the Republicans.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. Rather I am inquiring into their logic and consistency.

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of that, I shall not ask the gentleman any more questions.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not particularly a fight. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] raised the issue and I called his attention to the Congressional Record in which he is recorded as voting for the foreign commodity and I am happy that he has made an explanation that the RECORD is in error.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have always stood for the principle of having a tariff that would protect American industry, American labor, American manufactures, and all American people, and I am going to stand for that principle as long as I am in the House, but if the gentleman is going to be consistent, he ought to stop voting for reciprocal-trade agreements whereby he is permitting these farm commodities to come in here, and whereby he is permitting manufactured products to come in here, thus taking our jobs from American labor.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I decline to yield further. The gentleman is going into a different field altogether. I state to the gentleman that while I do not believe in a high protective tariff system, I do believe in a tariff for all, or a tariff for none. It ought to be uniform on all commodities, and nobody can gainsay the wisdom of that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do I understand from what I have heard of the gentleman's talk that he has joined the Republican side in favor of protection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, sir; I have not. I made no such statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What do I infer from

Mr. JONES of Texas. I said I do not believe in the principle of a high-protective tariff, but I believe in a tariff for all or a tariff for none, and I have so voted at all times. Whenever you have a tariff system it should treat all commodities alike.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How did the gentleman vote on the cotton-jute amendment?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I voted to provide for the use of cotton. I have at all times felt that when we have a tariff system there should be a compensatory tax on the foreign commodity. We had that in the original farm bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Now, to be honest about it—let us forget all this political hysteria that the gentleman has been trying to bring about-

Mr. JONES of Texas. I did not bring this up. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] raised the issue, and he had a right to raise it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was out of the Chamber at the time you brought my name up, but to be honest about the matter, was there not something else besides protection involved in the jute-cotton question? Was there not the fact that you were instructing the Department that they must buy certain commodities in their purchases?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No: it was a general proposition, as I remember it, that they could buy only American commodities. In fact, it provided that in the purchase of twine at least 25 percent of it should be made from American materials.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But it was not a general principle; it was just simply one order to a department.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, no. The Post Office Department could only buy supplies produced in America where those supplies were available. That is exactly the proposition that was involved when the gentleman made his statement on the floor the other day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Now, I welcome the gentleman to the "party of protection," and I hope that when the next protection measure comes up in the House the gentleman from Texas will vote for it and not confine his protection simply to cotton.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not; and I want to state to the gentleman that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia was absolutely general in its nature. I also want to express the hope that, since the gentleman declares that position, the next time the general proposition is considered that provides for buying American-made products, that even though cotton may be incidentally or directly involved, he will also vote for that and be consistent.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to have it fixed right here and now. When we have a tariff bill and when we call the roll on the reciprocal-trade agreements, you will vote to abolish those treaties because you want everything bought here in America?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You do not want anything foreign, and I will go with you if you will go along.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, sir. The gentleman is bringing up an entirely different issue. I stated awhile ago—the gentleman probably was not here then—that I did not believe in a high protective tariff, and I believed it should be brought down all along the line; but I do say that, whatever tariff we have, high or low, the American farmer should have whatever advantage he may obtain from it, the same as others. Even though the principle is declared here on the floor of the House that we buy American products, I invoke that principle generally; and I think it is unfair for the gentleman or anyone else in the House—and if they will stop to think about it I think they will agree—to say that we will forbid the buying of farm produce on one line and vote to permit it along another line. On both these propositions it was not a question of the tariff, but one of purchasing supplies for the respective departments from American materials and production.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman. I am in favor of buying all American products, and I will so vote, but when you have a situation in the House where the gentleman himself and most of those on his side of the aisle only vote when cotton is involved, and they do not care whether the other fellow gets any protection or not, I am not for that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is in error. If the gentleman will look at the Record of April 27, the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia simply provided that the Post Office Department should buy all supplies from American-made products, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, on page 6813 of the Record, is recorded as voting "no." Is that a correct or an incorrect record?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is an absolutely correct record, and it is brought about because as long as the gentleman is going to discriminate who will get protection, we on this side must have an opportunity. But I will make this agreement with you right now. I will buy 100 percent if you will. Will you?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that I voted and will vote in both instances to buy American products where they are available, to supply the departments. It does not make any difference whether cotton or anything else is involved.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is calling the record. Will he let me know how I voted on that question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Well, I think the gentleman is recorded here. I am happy to state that the gentleman is recorded as voting for the proposition, and I congratulate him because he is consistent in doing so.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me say this to the chairman of the committee, and I consider him a very able legislator—that if we are going to have this much controversy over each piece of legislation that is outside the legislation, I am going to object to future bills.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I agree with the gentleman. I had not intended to bring it up, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] raised the issue. The issue having been raised I felt that I should make my position on it clear.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield briefly, but I wish to reserve some of my time.

Mr. RICH. When we consider the wages paid American labor and the fact that the American standard of living is the highest of any in the world, and when we compare these advantages with similar conditions in foreign countries, does not the gentleman think we should have a tariff that would protect our commodities?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am sorry, I cannot yield further. I have made my position known two different times today. I trust it is clear to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the discussion that has just taken place is about as closely related to the bill under consideration as a cousin fifth removed.

The particular bill before us proposes to put a floor under the minimum quota allotments for wheat. This bill or something akin to it is desirable legislation. Personally, I think this bill does not go as far as it should in giving protection to the spring wheat farmer and protection to the American public under the Farm Act of 1938. The Farm Act of 1938 sets up a definite formula for the fixing of wheat acreage allotments for each year. It provides that in any year the wheat acreage allotment shall be based upon the supplies in evidence, normal consumption, and normal exports, plus 30 or 35 percent; and the Secretary is authorized to base the acreage allotment for wheat in any year upon that formula. This bill proposes a bottom or floor below which acreage shall not be reduced regardless of the formula.

At the time the Farm Act was approved, early in 1938, the wheat acreage for the United States was about 79.000,000 that is, in 1937, we planted 79,000,000 acres of wheat. The bill provided that for the year 1938 the wheat acreage allotment should be 62,500,000 acres. Then it was discovered that for this year, 1939, had the formula been applied, the wheat farmers would have been restricted to approximately 44,000,000 or 45,000,000 acres, meaning that this year there would be little more than half the wheat acreage of 1937. It was recognized that such a reduction in the wheat acreage would be disastrous to many individual wheat farmers because their acreage would be so reduced. Last year, therefore, the Committee on Agriculture brought in a bill to provide that the wheat acreage for this year should not go below 52,000,000 acres; that is, a floor of 52,000,000 acres below which the acreage allotment should not go. I objected to the consideration of that bill when it came in under the unanimous-consent rule and held it up until the bill was revised to make the minimum 55,000,000 acres. This bill was allowed to go through. The Secretary adopted the minimum as the maximum and placed the wheat acreage allotment at 55,000,000 acres. The gentleman from Texas has now brought in a bill from the Committee on Agriculture, and that is the bill before us, to provide that in no year shall wheat acreage go below 55,000,000 acres. The bill was offered on the Consent Calendar last week, but objections put it over for this consideration today.

The very day this bill came up on the Consent Calendar, on the 15th, the Secretary of Agriculture, surveying the situation, announced a wheat acreage allotment for next year of 62,000,000 acres. That is 7,000,000 over the 55,000,000 acres proposed in this bill.

Personally, I feel that 55,000,000 acres is too low a floor to set up as permanent legislation, so I have placed on the desk for consideration at the appropriate time an amendment to increase the 55,000,000 to 60,000,000, which, as you will realize, is still under the 62,000,000 acres already indicated for 1940, and 2,500,000 acres below that indicated for 1938 under the original bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield first to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understood the gentleman correctly, did not the 7,000,000-acre increase immediately follow the spending of $15,000,000 or $30,000,000 subsidizing exports of something like 100,000,000 bushels of wheat? Is it not true that the increase in acreage immediately followed the subsidy?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would not say immediately followed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us say within 30 or 60 days.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If I may answer the gentleman's question, the export policy was adopted last fall, in September, I think. The announcement of the 1940 base of 62,000,000 acres was made last week. Conditions have changed in that time. I received in this morning's mail letters from six widely scattered parts of my State, indicating that the wheat crop, because of dry weather, is apt to be reduced to the extent that the Secretary of Agriculture would be fully justified in raising the quota this year by 7,000,000

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not criticizing the Secretary for raising the wheat quota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then I trust the gentleman will support my amendment which raises the base to at least 60,000,000 acres.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am questioning the advisability and common sense of Congress and our Government's spending $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 in subsidizing exports and immediately following that with an increase in acreage to produce more wheat to affect the market.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The export subsidy, of course, is not involved in the bill before us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. As I understand the gentleman's statement, the bill now before us is not one to give additional authority to the Secretary of Agriculture in the matter of acreage allotments but is one to limit that authority to a definite

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct. This bill does not add to the authority of the Secretary; it reduces that authority by providing that the Secretary shall not go below a specified bottom. Otherwise he might cut us down to 40,000,000 acres.

Mr. MOTT. Since we already have this law on the statute books there would be no reason for one's voting against this bill even though he opposes the general philosophy of agricultural scarcity.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct. In fact, he should welcome this bill as a partial improvement. Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will there not be a tendency to make this minimum a maximum? Is it not the general tendency on the part of bureaucracy to make the minimum the max-

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The fear expressed by the gentleman from Ohio, I think, is well founded. That is exactly why I shall offer the amendment to raise the minimum from 55 to 60, because I fear that the minimum will tend to become the maximum.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. PACE. How does the 60 compare with the average over the last 5 or 10 years?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It would be considerably below the average. In 1937 it was 79,000,000; in 1938, 62,500,-000; and the Secretary is now allowing 62,000,000 for next year. The sixty is below that but is above the fifty-five allotted this year. We can now see how far wrong the formula would have been this year. Had we not put in the fifty-five million floor, had we gone to forty-four or fortytwo million, we would face a wheat famine in the 1939 crop.

Mr. PACE. Is not the gentleman afraid if that is the absolute minimum we might have a situation where we will have to subsidize another crop?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Judging from our experience right now, it will not be necessary to subsidize this crop. The press Saturday quoted Department of Agriculture officials as saying that the prospective short crop this year will take care of any surplus in wheat stocks.

Mr. PACE. That relates only to the one year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER].

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, the country has heard much from this New Deal administration, especially from the State Department, whose head has a background of free-trade philosophy, about "trade barriers" and about a "good neighbor" policy. And now we behold the break-down through foreign trade agreements of the farmer's last line of defense by an influx into the farmers' American market of cattle under the Canadian trade agreement. By the process of attrition the farmer's chief market, the American consumer, the greatest market in the world, has been invaded, here a little, there a little, until now the American farmer's citadel, thought to be impregnable from the attack, has been stormed, his last "barrier" thrown down and tramped upon by an avalanche of Canadian cattle, as clearly shown by the following article from the financial page of the Chicago Tribune of May 21.

The cattle farmers, the last of all of our agricultural producers to feel the sting of a New Deal destructive policy, have been betrayed in the House by their lip-service friends. Their last "barrier" to foreign invasion has gone the way of the "barriers" erected by a protective tariff to keep the American market for American farmers. The New Deal railed against the Hawley-Smoot tariff rates, but they lacked the courage directly to change a rate, but, instead, have opened wide the door to our markets through foreign trade agreements and given foreign producers free access to our shores, to the great detriment of the American cattle raiser and the American producer.

[From the Chicago Tribune of May 21, 1939]

CANADA POURING CATTLE INTO UNITED STATES UNDER LOW DUTY-IMPORTS SUFFICIENT FOR 2,000,000 PEOPLE

President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy of lowering import President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy of lowering import duties is largely responsible for the current heavy influx of cattle over the Canadian border. These cattle during recent weeks have been making a strong bid for the American beef trade. Between January 1 to May 11 Canada sent in a total of 111,557 cattle and calves, an increase of 71,015 head, or 174 percent, over the corresponding period last year.

Livestock men at the Chicago yards estimated that, converted into meat, these animals represented approximately 45,000,000 pounds.

ENOUGH FOR 2,000,000 PEOPLE

This was sufficient meat to furnish beef and veal to about 2,000,000 people, equivalent to almost 60 percent of the population of Chicago, without help from the American cattle raisers. Since these cattle are slaughtered in packing houses in this country, the meat loses its identity and is sold to consumers as domestic Since January 1 Canadian cattle raisers have saved well over $1,000,000 through the reduction of $1.50 a hundred pounds in the tariff on beef cattle over 700 pounds and $1 on calves from the regular duty. The lowered rates went into effect again January 1, as provided in the reciprocal-trade agreement between this country and Canada.

SHIPMENTS UNDER LOW TARIFF

This country permits 225,000 cattle and 100,000 calves annually to come in under the lowered tariff. The charge until these quotas are filled is $1.50 on cattle as well as calves. The regular rate is $3 on cattle and $2.50 on calves.

Not more than 60,000 cattle are accepted at the reduced rate in any one quarter during the year. It was estimated at the stock-yards yesterday that about 90 percent of the quota for the second quarter of 1939 has been filled as a result of the heavy movement from Canada since April 1.

Cattle markets in this country have been feeling the effects of the competition from Canada lately, and many cattlemen contend that pressure of these cattle has forced some classes to the lowest levels of the year, particularly domestic stock selling in competition with the imports.

PRICES LOWEST OF YEAR

Canadian cattle last week sold within a range of $9 to $10.75 and, together with comparable quality domestic cattle within this price range, were lowest of the year. Although pressure on such cattle was severe, a few "specialties" from well-known feeders in this country sold up to $14, as high as at any time since December 1997.

Last week's cattle average at the Chicago stockyards dropped 25 cents to $9.80, lowest since December 1938. Some of the plainest quality steers, as well as most butcher stock, finished the week 15 to 25 cents higher, but the general trend for most steers and yearlings was lower, with the bulk off 25 cents. Calves closed steady. Stockers and feeders were strong to 15 cents higher.

HOGS LOWER FOR WEEK

The market for hogs declined unevenly 10 to 35 cents under pressure of heavy receipts last week, some kinds closing at the lowest price levels since July 1934. The 6-day average at $6.80 was the same as the preceding week, but it compared with $8.40 a year ago and with $11.35 2 years ago.

A sharp break also hit the market for slaughter lambs. Prices closed off mostly 50 cents. The week's average at $9.30 was lowest since the middle of March. Old sheep slumped 25 to 50 cents to the lowest levels of the season.

Yesterday's lamb trade was active and fully steady. Two loads of 82-pound California spring lambs sold to a packer at $10.65 and four loads averaging 86 pounds went at the same price. A load of 67-pound Californias sold at $9.50.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Chicago Tribune of yesterday relating to importation of Canadian beef cattle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 248

Resolved, etc., That the last sentence of section 333 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to the minimum acreage allotment for wheat), is amended to read as follows: "The national acreage allotment for wheat for any year shall be not less than 55,000,000 acres."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read ts follows:

Line 7, strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the amendment just read is the one I mentioned in my previous remarks. The legislation proposed I regard as desirable, but I think it does not go far enough in protecting us against too low a bottom. My amendment merely proposes to change the bill before us by making 60,000,000 acres the minimum base instead of fifty-five.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. How many acres were planted in wheat last year?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In 1938, 62,500,000 acres was the acreage allotment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This would reduce it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. For this current year it is 55,000,000. The bill before us would fix 55,000,000 as the permanent base. My amendment would raise that to sixty.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman does not mean "permanent base." He means a permanent minimum.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. A permanent minimum; yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When we try to limit this acreage, we ask the farmers to only plant so many acres; is that correct?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am not trying to limit the farmers. I am trying to limit the Secretary. The low base falls especially hard on the growers of hard spring wheat, which is never produced in surplus. It really should have a separate allotment.

Mr. RICH. What I am getting at is this: I know from statements made by a farmer in Virginia that practically all the farmers in Virginia who agreed to a certain limitation of wheat acreage last year did not obey the rule that was laid down by the Secretary. They planted and raised as much wheat as they had theretofore, yet they all received checks for not raising wheat.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then that situation should be investigated.

Mr. RICH. That happened with the farmers between here and Richmond. If they are going to have an honest allotment and the farmers expect to be paid, does not the gentleman think they should agree to do a certain thing and do it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; I think they should. As far as I know, no farmer in my territory is being paid who does not comply.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unwise to adopt this amendment. It simply places a minimum below which the allotment cannot go. The formula is in the bill for determining the national allotment, which depends upon the supply.

For this year, 1939, the acreage of wheat would have been between forty-five and forty-seven million acres if we had not had a provision in the bill which made the minimum allotment 55,000,000 acres. We placed that in the bill for 1 year, and this merely continues the minimum allotment.

If the gentleman who offers the pending amendment will study the situation carefully I think he will reach the conclusion it may be an unwise amendment. I hope that they may only rarely go this low. They will not go this low unless there is a tremendous oversupply or a considerable oversupply of wheat. The difficulty with raising the minimum to 60,000,000 acres is that you will have a vote on a marketing quota many more times with a 60,000,000 minimum than you will with a 55,000,000 minimum. I hope there will not be a necessity for a marketing quota, but if we put the minimum allotment at 60,000,000 acres and we do happen to get an excessive supply of wheat, it might take a number of years to get it adjusted properly and we might have to have a marketing quota for 3 or 4 years; whereas if we have a minimum of 55,000,000 acres, then I think there will be only rarely the necessity for a marketing quota. In fact, there will not be such necessity this year. If we had had the 60,000,000 acres right along we might have had the necessity for a marketing quota this year, but I hope that one will not be necessary often.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will yield, what would be the difference in the cost between 55,000,000 and 60,000,000 acres?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There will be no difference in the cost between 55,000,000 and 60,000,000 acres. It is simply a minimum below which the national allotment for wheat cannot go. The payments are the same in either event. The payments are based on soil conservation, and that is based on the distribution of a certain fund which is available. The amount of payment is gaged on the number of acres essential to take up the particular fund that is to be used for soil conservation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Suppose 55,000,000 was used one year and 60,000,000 another year; would there be any difference?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There would not be any difference in the payments at all.

Mr. McCORMACK. I mean, would there be any difference in the cost?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There would be no difference in the cost.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Case of South Dakota) there were-ayes 39, noes 63. So the amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by inserting therein a message of the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, as read by Secretary Hull in a radio address Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by making a brief statement on a low-rent housing project in my district, and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 200

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 5748, a bill to amend the Second Liberty Loan Act, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) to provide minimum national allotments for cotton and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

House Joint Resolution 247

Resolved, etc., That section 343 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to the national allotment for cotton), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The national allotment for any year (after 1939) shall be not less than 11,500,000 bales."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this simply does the same thing for cotton that the other joint resolution did for

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What does it do for cotton in relation to what the other resolution did for wheat? What proportion is this 11,500,000 bales of the total production of cotton?

Mr. JONES of Texas. This resolution simply continues the same provision we have this year on cotton, as the other resolution did a similar provision we have as to wheat.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The wheat provision was apparently settled by the vote of representatives of the cotton States. I am not going to suggest that the provisions as to cotton be settled by those who come from the wheat States, but at least I would like to have the resolution explained. The amendments under this or any other resolution are difficult for those who are not in the States affected to understand.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may state to the gentleman that on the average we have had above 30,000,000 acres of cotton in production each year. This resolution puts the minimum acreage at around 28,000,000 acres. Being a minimum, we felt it should go below the average production but should be high enough to prevent the dismantling of the machinery. This is practically the same treatment of cotton as is applicable to wheat. The formula determines the amount of the allotment just as in the case of wheat. This will simply form the minimum base, that is all.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I ask whether or not the acreage or bale allotment for cotton was not raised at least twice by special measures that were brought before the House before anything was done to put a floor under wheat?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, that act was for 1938; and there is no change in 1938. This base provision was put in on cotton and there was a provision for a base on the amount, but the combination of the two would still leave cotton a little below the similar percentage of the average production of wheat. We are really treating wheat a little better than we did cotton, even with the combination.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There was some adjustment of the cotton acreage allotment as a result of the showing by the California and Arizona people. We had a resolution before the House once, if not twice, before we had this minimumacreage amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That was done because there was an unfortunate provision in the Cotton Act, which did not make proper provision for the newer producing areas. There were more of those in cotton than in wheat, but even with that adjustment cotton is still left a much greater percentage below the normal acreage than wheat, and properly so, because of the larger supply of cotton.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, I am not going to object to this joint resolution or try to amend it, or do anything of the sort, but I should like to call the attention of the Members of the House, if I may, to the fact that because in the early consideration of the wheat bill there was some discussion in which a certain amount of party feeling was expressed; the vote apparently followed pretty much on party lines, and as a result the acreage allotment for wheat was determined by the vote of representatives of the cotton-growing States and not by those of the wheat-growing States. At the same time, I hope those who come from the wheat States will not interfere with the fixing of an acreage satisfactory to the cotton people.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may state that I have more wheat in the district I have the honor to represent than I have cotton. My district is more western than southern. The little partisan tinge that was brought in was not in connection with this bill, but in connection with some discussion that has been going on for several days, with which the gentleman is familiar.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is probably true of the gentleman's district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I hope it will not have any effect on the measure, because that is one of the field-day affairs we exercise the privilege of having in the House occasionally. It has been going on for several days, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Apparently it did have some effect on the vote, because, although what the gentleman states as to his district is doubtless true, an examination of those who were standing on the floor would indicate that the vote was decided by those who come from the cotton States rather than the wheat States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If it had any effect, it was very little.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HARE. I gather from this bill that it does not interfere with the acreage of cotton and I want to know whether it does interfere with the allocation of acreage.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; it does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. HARE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARE. I would like to know whether or not an amendment to this resolution would be in order.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if germane to the resolution.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Debate has not been exhausted on the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reading of the bill for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to use any time?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that I shall not speak in opposition to this bill, and I take the floor now in order to make a few observations with reference to the cotton program in general because I feel that this little eight-line bill is of national interest and national importance.

Beginning in the fiscal year 1928–29, under a Republican administration and running down to the present time, we have submitted to Congress and imposed on the people and the cotton growers of this country 21 cotton programs, a little over 2 per annum. If I had the time, I would go into the details of some of those programs. They start with the 16-cent loan made by the Federal Farm Board in the fall of 1929 and they come down to the bill of last year, and the twenty-second program is now before us in the form of a $338,000,000 addition to the Senate bill. When I say before us, I mean before the Congress.

When we go out and start spending something like $200,000,000 per annum in connection with one particular crop, we are dealing with a question of national importance. When we deal with a crop that involves something like 3,000,000 persons directly employed, which loses its export market to a point where within recent months we have dropped to a 50-year low, that should attract our attention in a very emphatic manner.

My State of Michigan is interested in the cotton business the same as the Southern States because we produce and export automobiles from Michigan to the South, and I become concerned when I see a thing happening in cotton which is in effect today, with the cotton mills of the country running in the red, with the cotton mills of the country without raw cotton with which to operate, although the Commodity Credit Corporation holds something like eleven and a half or twelve million bales in its hands, which cotton is not in the channels of commerce. I am concerned when the cotton mills of this country, finding themselves in that position, are forced to negotiate for the importation of Brazilian cotton when we have such an amount of cotton on hand. I am concerned when the mills of other parts of the world, which have heretofore purchased American cotton for their consumption to be converted into cloth, find themselves afraid to purchase any additional cotton because of the fact that we sit here and talk about subsidizing exports, which means to say that if those subsidies begin to operate within the near future there is a chance that the stocks of cotton and cotton goods on the floors of the foreign mills will break in price. Therefore they become less interested in purchasing and importing to their warehouses and mills cotton which we have to sell. This is a staggering blow to our international trade and brought about through discussions about subsidizing exports. It shows what "talk" does to markets.

I also become concerned when we sit here and talk about raising the quotas on cotton acreage—and I am in favor of raising the quotas—and at the same time talk about spending $143,000,000 on cotton, in rough figures, as carried in the bill you are going to have before you here in a few days, and I should like to make these suggestions to my cotton friends in the South, and I repeat that I am interested in this cotton, and I voted for cotton the other day instead of jute, and I am now giving some of my reasons for my vote at that time, as much as I disliked to break with the leadership of my side of the House when we voted.

If we would take the $50,000,000 that is coming through in the bill to which I have just referred, and earmark that for parity payments to farmers who do not put their cotton in the loan, and thereby induce them to sell cotton instead of adding to the loan cotton held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, that would be a constructive move. And if we would also take about $53,000,000 of that $143,000,000 and earmark this sum for parity payments, coming out of the $225,000,000 which is carried under section 303, I believe it is, and let that run to growers who did not put their cotton in the loan, that, no doubt, would also be very constructive. If we would take a few steps like this, I think we would wind up with results that would give us several benefits:

First. You would have a complete elimination of necessity for an export subsidy, and you would not in that manner provide the money with which to pay a subsidy on exports of cotton.

Second. You would also induce the growers through paying them something like $10 per bale, or 2 cents a pound, in the form of parity payments, to sell cotton instead of putting cotton in the loan, and that would help relieve the burden of the Commodity Credit Corporation in that no additional cotton would go in the loan. If cotton continues to go into the loan pool in future months and years, we will be requested to give additional money to help subsidize the exports of increased loan cotton.

Third. It would also enable the Secretary of Agriculture to keep under his control approximately $40,000,000 in order to assist him in purchasing compliance of cotton growers with his 1940 cotton program; so the Secretary would not be handicapped in that manner.

Fourth. This plan will also enable us to escape an international cotton trade war which will certainly follow the initiation by us of a program of subsidizing cotton exports. Europe wants at least 4,500,000 bales of cotton from our next crop at the world market price, which is now approximately 8 cents per pound.

Fifth. A 2-cent-per-pound subsidy or $10 per bale would call for cotton dropping below 6 cents per pound before it would be profitable for the cotton producer to take advantage of loan provisions. Students of the market agree that a drop to 6 cents per pound is very remote. When cotton is placed in the loan, carrying charges immediately begin to accrue at about $4 per bale per year.

Sixth. Paying the grower a $10 cash subsidy per bale or say 2 cents per pound, at time of sale, should be sufficient inducement to keep every bale of cotton out of the loan and thereby eliminate additions to our present 11,500,000 bales on which the Government has already advanced in excess of $600,000,000 and which if liquidated on today's market, would indicate a loss of around $170,000,000.

Seventh. This plan would again put American cotton in the competitive market of the world and its better grade and staple would enable it to resume its natural and historical position in the channels of trade.

Those are some of the things that could be accomplished. Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes,

Mr. FERGUSON. Is the gentleman in favor of the funds carried in the agricultural appropriation bill for parity payments?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am in favor of those funds being appropriated if we can use them in a manner which will not subsidize the export of cotton or induce farmers to put additional cotton into the loan; otherwise, I see no sense in making the appropriations.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does not the gentleman believe that if the parity payments are sufficient, and if necessary we should write into the law, "If you accept parity payments, you do not get a loan," that in the long run it will be a cheap method of handling the situation? That is, parity payments will cost us less than loans above the market value.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the parity payments will cost far less than the program carried through the loan mechanism, will cost, eventually.

Mr. FERGUSON. I hope the gentleman will get a lot of support on his side when these payments come into the

Mr. CRAWFORD. These 21 programs that I have mentioned briefly have cost the people of this country, the Treasury of the United States, roughly, $1,200,000,000, and that does not include the $143,000,000 now tied up in the Senate bill going to conference. Neither does it provide for losses which we may incur on eleven and a half million bales of cotton now in the commodity loan. The time has come for the Republican Members on our side of the House to give just as much consideration to this cotton program as those on the opposite side give to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Did I understand the gentleman that he personally is in favor of subsidizing eleven and a half million bales of cotton and also did he make the statement that we did not need one-half of it, and still that we ought to use the United States Treasury?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman did not understand my statement at all and I shall repeat it because I want to be understood. In my opinion a cotton program involving only parity payments will cost the Treasury of the United States, in other words, the taxpayers of this country, far less than will a program which operates on a basis which carries soil-benefit payments and at the same time operates in such a manner that it includes the cotton grower to put his cotton into a loan, to be further subsidized at some future time, through the loss which the Treasury will suffer on sales out of that loan pool, in addition to the subsidies which Congress will be asked to appropriate for the purpose of subsidizing exports of the loan cotton to some other part of the world. Does that clear up the gentleman's question?

Mr. MURRAY. I understood the gentleman to say that he is against the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, I did not say that I was against the amendment. I opened my remarks by saying that I am in favor of this bill as presented.

Mr. MURRAY. Then the gentleman must be in favor of subsidizing 11.500.000 bales of cotton.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not. I now advocate a program which, had it been followed from the beginning under Republican administration or Democratic administration, those eleven and one-half million bales would never have been accumulated in the first place, and, in the second place, I now recommend that the money be handled in such a way that no farmer will be induced or hired to put his cotton into a loan.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is speaking about subsidies being paid to the growers of cotton, wheat, and so forth.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a choice between two evils, if I may say so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is this not the fact, that they are really not subsidies at all that are being paid to the cotton and wheat growers, but simply such sum of money as restitution to place the cotton grower and the wheat grower and the agricultural producer on the same basis as tariff-protected industries?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, it is an attempt to do that, and also to bring about parity, or income as related to outgo.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And is it not further the fact that that is what Mr. Hamilton, the author of the tariff upon industries to protect infant industries, advocated?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, in reading his reports I find that he stated in substance that that would necessarily have to come if you had a prosperous agriculture.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. If I understand the gentleman correctly, I gather that he is of the opinion that all of these little appropriations that are given to the farmers in aid of their agricultural pursuits are more or less a little salve—

Mr. CRAWFORD. Political salve.

Mr. MASSINGALE. And they do not bring about any real relief. Now, the gentleman heard the arguments by the statesmen on the tariff and trade agreements. Is it the gentleman's opinion that we cannot be honest—I mean this Congress—cannot be honest with the American farmer unless we either give him some kind of compensating legislation that will make up for what the tariff costs him, or repeal both the tariff and the trade agreements?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I have advocated for years before coming to Congress, in my business associations, that what we need to do is revamp the whole tariff structure so that its benefits would go down to the bottom of the pockets of the fellow who wears the overalls, or else get rid of the whole proposition. I believe in that kind of a program today.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman, by no stretch of the imagination, I apprehend, can see any real benefit to the American farmer from a protective tariff?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would not go with the gentleman on that statement, because when you say "protective tariff," you leave it wide open for a man's imagination to run wild. You mean a protective tariff as related to what?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 343 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to the national allotment for cotton), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The national allotment for any year (after 1939) shall be not less than 11,500,000 bales."

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hare: At the end of line 8 add the following: "Provided, That allotment of acreage to the various States be based upon the ratio of the number of cotton growers and their dependents in each State bears to the total number of such persons in the United States."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment, that it is not germane. This resolution deals with section 343 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and this amendment has to do with section 344 of the State allotments.

If the gentleman desires me to reserve the point of order, I will reserve it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I am not unaware that this amendment is probably subject to a point of order, but I wanted to offer it at this time for the benefit of future consideration by the members of our Committee on Agriculture, because if this Government is to continue to regulate acreage, is to continue to regulate production, then, in my opinion, it will have to change its basis for allocation of both acreage and production. The only fair, equitable, and just basis for the allocation of acreage for cotton, for instance, is that of the individual engaged in the business. In other words, if the Government is to say to me, "I will submit a plan if you will follow it and endeavor to insure your success," such plan should afford each and all persons so engaged the same opportunity. It takes as much to feed and clothe and educate a family in one cotton-producing State as it does in another. The opportunity, therefore, for getting the necessary food, clothing, and opportunity for education should be equal.

As I just said, I am aware that this amendment is probably not germane to this bill, but I want to submit this for later consideration of the committee and the Congress, and I submit that the same principle, sooner or later, if the policy is to be continued, must apply to other crops as well as cotton, namely, wheat, corn, and rice, and so forth. But, Mr. Speaker, if the chairman of the committee will yield me about 2 additional minutes I want to refer to some remarks that have been made here today and for the last few days with regard to the high-tariff policy and our reciprocal trade-agreement policy.

Much has been said about the effect of the reciprocal tradeagreement policy on our exports. Figures have been quoted showing that the value of exports has decreased under the trade-agreement policy.

This is significant, but it is not at all conclusive, because the value of exports may decrease materially and volume remain the same. One cannot measure the quantity of exports simply by referring to value. The same is true of imports.

Much has been said about the loss of our foreign market for cotton. It has been magnified by Members on both sides of the aisle. I desire to make a few comparisons which may dissipate some of the conclusions heretofore presented.

To illustrate, I invite attention to the average annual production of cotton for the 5-year period 1921 to 1925, inclusive. The average annual production here was 11,-515,000 bales. The average annual exports for the same period were 6,755,000 bales. In other words, the average annual exports were 58 percent of the average annual production.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Let us take the second 5-year period 1926 to 1930, inclusive. Here the average annual production was 14,834,000 bales, the average annual exports being 8,348,000 bales; in other words, 57 percent of the average annual production was exported. Now let us come a little closer to date, and take the 5-year period, 1932 to 1936. The average annual production here was 11,746,000 bales, and the average annual exports for the same period was 58 percent of the average annual production.

Taking the years between 1921 to 1936, inclusive, and consider them by 5-year groups, we find the first 5-year period. 1921 to 1925, the average annual exports of cotton were 58 percent of the average annual production; during the second 5-year period, 1926 to 1930, the average annual exports were 57 percent of the average annual production; and during the third 5-year period, 1932 to 1936, inclusive, the annual average exports were 58 percent of the average annual production; that is, we find by taking the figures over a period of years that the average annual exports have kept pace with our average annual production. It would seem from these figures that if we have lost our markets in foreign countries we have lost corresponding markets at home.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the gentleman is not in support of that kind of proposition, is he? I asked that question for this reason: As we lose our domestic-consumption market the rayon man and the silk man absorbs it. That is No. 1. No. 2: As the world consumption of cotton goes up we should retain our pro rata share of that increase in consumption. We have not retained it. The balance of the world, through our cotton program in 21 different sections, to which I referred, has increased the acreage by leaps and bounds in other parts of the world. World consumption went along with it, and today we find ourselves without the enjoyment of that increased market.

Mr. HARE. No; I am not in favor of losing our markets anywhere. But the point I am making is in reply to the argument that the reciprocal trade-treaty policy was responsible for the loss of the foreign cotton market. This is not supported by the facts, because while exports have decreased-certainly they have decreased-they have not decreased in any greater proportion than total production of cotton in our country has decreased. The charge cannot be made, therefore, that the reduction in cotton exports is due to the reciprocal trade-agreement policy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman. Personally I think the reciprocal trade agreement program has had nothing to do with our cotton situation. I think the trouble with our cotton situation can be laid at the feet of Congress under both administrations, beginning back in 1929.

Mr. HARE. Another observation I would like to make is that too often we attempt to reach a conclusion on one illustration. You could take and compare any 2 years during the 15-year period I have referred to and the percentages would all be different and would, therefore, give no definite information as to what has been taking place. Just as "one swallow does not make a summer," so you cannot compare one single transaction with another and draw a positive, definite conclusion. It is necessary to compare a number of transactions with a corresponding number of other transactions in order to arrive at a positive and sound conclusion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina on the ground that it is not germane to the pending joint resolution. The Chair has considered the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina and finds upon a careful reading of the amendment that it does not relate to the section of the act that the resolution under consideration seeks to amend and, therefore, cannot possibly be in order.

The point of order is sustained.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my permission to extend remarks secured on March 22 be renewed, and that I also be allowed to insert in the extension of remarks a statement made by the president of the Missouri Farmers' Association on the silver jubilee of this organization.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5427. An act making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

COTTON BALEAGE AND ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5498) to make applicable to the years after 1939 the special provisions relating to cotton baleage and acreage allotments which apply for 1939 and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 343 (b) of the Agricultural Ad-Be it enacted, etc., That section 343 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to maximum and minimum national baleage allotments for cotton), is amended by striking out "1938 or 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "1938, 1939, or any subsequent year."

SEC. 2. Section 344 (e) (1) of such act, as amended (relating to minimum county allotments of acreage), is amended by striking out "For 1938 and 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "For 1938, 1939, or any subsequent year."

1939, or any subsequent year."

SEC. 3. Section 344 (g) of such act, as amended (relating to the 4-percent allotment to farms), is amended by striking out "For each of the years 1938 and 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "For 1938, 1939, and each subsequent year.'

1938, 1939, and each subsequent year.

SEC. 4. Section 344 (h) of such act, as amended (relating to providing an acreage to farms of not less than 50 percent of 1937 planted acreage plus diverted acreage), is amended by striking out "for each of the years 1938 and 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof "for 1938, 1939, and each subsequent year."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Doxey] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be very brief. However, may I say that when I drafted this bill-H. R. 5498-I included in it an extension of the national cotton allotment and provided for a maximum and minimum also. section 1 of my bill. When we discussed this bill in committee, it was determined that it would be best not to provide for a national maximum allotment for cotton, and, as my colleague [Mr. Jones], the gentleman from Texas, chairman of our Committee on Agriculture, had a bill with reference only to national allotments pending, section 1 of my bill was stricken and in lieu thereof the Jones bill pertaining only to national allotments was reported. At the same time sections 2, 3, and 4 of the Doxey bill-H. R. 5498-was reported, which deals only with cotton allotments with reference to counties and individual farms.

The bill continues the same provisions after 1939 that now apply to the cotton allotments. I will not go into detail and explain the full provisions because I do not feel it is necessary. The bill speaks for itself. There is no opposition. I have talked to a number of you men on both sides of the aisle regarding it. We have had hearings on a national farm program in my committee ever since January and it does not lock like we are going to have any general farm legislation at this session of Congress. When that situation rose, I presented this matter to the committee, which reported my bill favorably. I know you gentlemen are anxious to complete this work today and take up other bills, so I will not continue to speak further unless there are questions regarding my bill. I will be glad to answer them as best I can. All I ask is to please be brief.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DOXEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. There is not only no opposition to the bill but there is an understanding that there is need for haste in the passage of this measure. In some of the cotton-growing sections they have already begun to plant and there is a little uncertainly in the minds of the farmers if this legislation is not extended for the 2-year term. I favor the bill. I wish it could have been brought before the House at an earlier date.

Mr. DOXEY. I thank the gentleman from Arizona. We made all the haste possible, but these matters have to move slowly. I appreciate this opportunity of bringing the matter up, and I am going to show my appreciation by not discussing it at any great length. I am sure the bill will pass this

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In other words, the three sections of your bill merely continue the existing provisions of the present law under which we are now operating?

Mr. DOXEY. That is right. My bill provides for years subsequent to 1939.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It makes no change?

Mr. DOXEY. It is necessary that this be done immediately, and the reason is obvious. If there are no other questions, I will ask if the gentleman from Kansas desires any time?

Mr. HOPE. I have no requests for time on this side.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill, S. 1569, be substituted in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES 1?

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, may I say that after reporting the House bill we considered and reported the Senate bill, striking out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill and inserting the language of the House bill. This procedure will save a conference between the Senate and House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I also say in this connection that the Senate bill as amended is simply substituting the Doxey bill as we have amended it here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (e) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out, in the first line thereof, the words "1938 and 1939" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That paragraph (1) of subsection (e) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to minimum county allotments of acreage), is amended by striking out 'For 1938 and 1939' and inserting in lieu thereof 'For 1938, 1939, and any subsequent year.'

"SEC. 2. Subsection (g) of section 344 of such act, as amended (relating to the 4-percent allotment to farms), is amended by striking out 'For each of the years 1938 and 1939' and inserting in lieu thereof 'For 1938, 1939, and each subsequent year.'

"SEC. 3. Subsection (h) of section 344 of such act, as amended (relating to providing an expresse to forms of not less than 50 percents."

(relating to providing an acreage to farms of not less than 50 percent of 1937 planted acreage plus diverted acreage), is amended by striking out 'for each of the years 1938 and 1939' and inserting in lieu thereof 'for 1938, 1939, and each subsequent year.'"

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment to ask the gentleman a question. I notice in the House bill you have stricken out certain language.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; that is because we reported another bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. You substituted language and in that language this is made permanent legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. It is already in the present law for this year and it is simply continued.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; but you continue it from now on under the terms of this bill. Why continue it for subsequent years without naming the years?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Simply because it is a minimum provision, anyway. It simply provides a method by which we can prevent the allotment being too low. It is simply a provision for a minimum allotment; otherwise the allotment is made just as usual.

Mr. COCHRAN. In other words, as long as the law exists this provision is part of the law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. The law is not being extended by this

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not at all.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 5498) was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AMENDMENTS, 1939

Mr. STEAGALL submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, in order that I may ask the gentleman from Alabama a question on the conference report just submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama when he intends to call up the conference report he has just submitted?

Mr. STEAGALL. That will be entirely subject to the wishes of the Speaker and the House organization.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senate must act first?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; I believe the House acts first, although I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Was not this a House bill, and did not the Senate ask for a conference?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the House asked for a conference. I may say I will give the gentleman notice before calling up the conference report.

LXXXIV-374

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman. [Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I have just made in regard to H. R. 5498 and the Senate bill that was substituted for it, S. 1569.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST BOXED APPLES

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up for immediate consideration the bill (S. 1096) to amend section 8c of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, to make its provisions applicable to Pacific Northwest boxed apples, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "(k)." Paragraphs (2) and (6) of section 8c are amended by inserting after the word "apples" the words ", other than Pacific Northwest boxed apples."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "following", strike out "'(k)'" and "'(m)' insert

Line 7, after the word "than", strike out the remainder of line 7 and the word "apples" in line 8 and insert "apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration, a Senate bill, applies simply to the Northwest-Oregon, Washington, and Idaho—and relates to apples. We strike out the words "Pacific Northwest boxed apples" and insert the words "apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho." There is no opposition to the bill that I know of, and I ask that it be passed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, to make its provisions applicable to apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho."

HOP MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4539) to extend the time during which orders and marketing agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, may be applicable to hops, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce] such time as he may desire.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, this bill is of great importance to a few hop farmers. There are only 1,300 farmers raising hops in the United States. Half of them are in Oregon, about a quarter of them are in California, and about a quarter in Washington.

Two years ago we passed a hop bill which put that industry under the Triple A Act, giving the producers the right to have enforcable orders. Hops at that time were 13 cents a pound, and the industry was in bad shape. Under the agreement hops were put at a minimum of 20 cents a pound, and the farmers were fairly happy. It cost about that amount to raise the hops. This program has been in operation 2 years and has been very successful.

This bill is a compromise and seeks the extension of the program for an additional 2 years. The brewers are the only people interested outside of the farmers, and the brewers have written the following letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JONES: Reference is made to H. R. 4539, a bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, as the same may be applicable to hops.

The United States Brewers' Association, which is composed of approximately 180 brewers who manufacture more than 50 percent of the malt beverages sold in the United States, has given serious consideration to the proposal contained in H. R. 4539, which would extend the provisions of section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, insofar as hops are concerned, to September 1, 1942

We feel that on the basis of experience to date under existing law that the proposed amendment is justified, and we are more than glad to join with the hop growers in asking favorable consideration of this legislation.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Why did not the gentleman make this program permanent instead of extending it for 2 years?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. We would like to do so, but the brewers have asked for an extension of only 2 years. This is a compromise, so I am asking for an extension for 2 years.

Mr. PACE. Are the brewers in charge of this legislation? Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The brewers are satisfied with an extension of 2 years. They asked that a limit of 2 years be placed on the extension. I may say that most of the hops in Oregon are grown in the district of my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott].

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I include the following comments on the bill now under consideration:

AREA OF PRODUCTION

Practically the entire quantity of hops produced in the United States are grown in the States of Oregon, Washington, and California. Approximately one-half of the production comes from the Oregon area, while California and Washington produce about equal amounts of the remainder. There is a very small production in the States of New York and Idaho, but the volume produced in the latter States is very small in relation to the entire production.

ACREAGE AND VOLUME OF PRODUCTION

There are at the present time approximately 31,500 acres in production yielding in 1938, 35,000,000 pounds of hops. These are produced on about 1,300 farms.

USES FOR HOPS AND COST OF PRODUCTION

Hops are used almost entirely for the manufacture of beer and ale. Because of this restricted outlet, the industry finds that even a relatively small annual oversupply means returns to growers far below cost of production. Owing to heavy capital investment and the use of hand labor in picking, the cost of production is in excess of 20 cents per pound.

MARKETING AGREEMENT AND ORDER FOR CROP YEARS 1938 AND 1939

In order to eliminate this annual overproduction of hops and bring to growers at least a little profit above production costs, Congress in 1938 amended the Agricultural Adjustment Act permitting hops to come under the provision of the act. A marketing agreement and order was adopted for crop years 1938 and 1939. The results in 1938 have been very satisfactory. In contrast to 1937 when hops were selling for as low as 13 cents per pound, the price for 1938 hops under the agreement has been held at 20 cents per pound or better.

H. R. 4539 NOW UNDER DISCUSSION

This successful operation to date merits the continuation of said program for an additional period of time in order that the purposes of the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, may be accomplished for the growers of hops and for the benefit of the hop industry as a whole. This additional period of time is stated in bill S. 1579 and in identical terms in H. R. 4539 as crop years 1940 and 1941.

The bill designated as S. 1579 was passed by the Senate a short time ago, and the House is asked to give H. R. 4539 similar consideration.

H. R. 4539 HAS GENERAL APPROVAL

The Senate has already passed a bill identical to the one under discussion now and designated as S. 1579.

The Hop Control Board, in charge of the hop-marketing agreement and order, made up of elected growers, brewers, and handlers, has urged that Congress give its approval, as indicated by a resolution.

The House Agricultural Committee gave H. R. 4539 unanimous approval.

A favorable report to the chairman of the House Agricultural Committee was submitted by the Department of Agriculture.

H. R. 4539 IS NOT NEW LEGISLATION AND DOES NOT ASK FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

There is no request for financial aid nor is new legislation involved. It merely asks that Congress permit an additional period of time for hops to come under the provisions of the act. When such permission is granted, the adoption of a marketing agreement and order for crop years 1940 and 1941 is subject to a favorable vote of two-thirds of the growers and 50 percent of the handlers by volume.

H. R. 4539 DOES NOT INCREASE THE PRICE OF BEER TO THE CONSUMERS

The amount of hops used does not exceed and often is less than three-fourths pound per barrel of beer, and a few cents more or less for hops used cannot reflect itself in the retail price either up or down. The increased cost of hops to brewers is offset by better-quality hops produced under financial returns favorable to the growers.

DOES H. R. 4539 APPLY TO THE ENTIRE UNITED STATES?

The production of hops in States other than Oregon, Washington, and California is so small that the marketing agreement and order so far has applied only to the three Pacific Coast States mentioned. Unless production in other areas should greatly increase, there is no need to apply the agreement and order to areas other than Oregon, Washington, and California.

MIGHT RESTRICTED SHIPPING UNDER A MARKETING AGREEMENT AND ORDER LEAD TO A SHORTAGE OF HOPS AND BE A DETRIMENT TO BREWERS AND A LOSS TO THE GROWERS?

No restriction will be placed on shipping if available supplies plus current crop are no greater any one year than requirements of the brewing industry.

PLEASE EXPLAIN HOW THE PROGRAM OPERATED IN 1938

The elected grower members of the Hop Control Board, known as the allocation committee, made an estimate of each grower's crop the total of which in 1938 was 35,101,398 pounds. The entire Hop Control Board made up of elected growers, brewers, and dealers worked with the Secretary of Agriculture and after considering the supplies of 1934 annual consumption of beer, it was determined that brewers' needs would be sufficient if 29,600,000 pounds were allotted for certification and shipment. The reduction, therefore, in 1938 was slightly under 20 percent. As stated earlier, this resulted in a price level on the 1938 crop certificated hops of 20 cents per pound or better, as compared to 13 cents per pound in 1937, when their was no agreement.

UNDER THIS PLAN A PORTION OF THE CROP IS NOT HARVESTED. IS THIS NOT A LOSS TO THE GROWERS?

The growers generally are in favor of early spring allotments so that land not needed for hops that year might be used for other crops, but it is doubtful whether this can be done under the Triple A Act as now written. However, in spite of any loss incurred through a reduction under the agreement, the growers feel that they are still much better off with the present agreement than they would be without

WHAT ARE THE EXPENSES OF THE HOP CONTROL BOARD AND HOW ARE THEY PAID?

The Hop Control Board now makes a charge of two-fifths cent per pound for all hops allocated and shipped and this charge is paid by the first handlers which are generally the dealers in hops. If at the end of the fiscal year this charge proved greater than required, the unused portion is returned. No salaries are paid to the elected members of the Hop Control Board. The principal and branch office employ a total of 13 persons. Total cost $77,000 covering all costs incurred in estimating all the crops in the three States and certifying shipments of allocated hops.

IMMEDIATE FAVORABLE ACTION DESIRED

Present and future prices on hops are affected by this legislation and the hop growers ask that favorable action be taken immediately.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oregon [Mr. Pierce] has so well explained this bill that I believe no further explanation is really necessary, except to say that, so far as I can learn, there is no opposition to this proposal on the part of either the growers, the dealers, or the brewers. They are all in favor of the bill, and so, generally, are the people in the States of Oregon, Washington, and California, where practically all the hops are grown.

I have prepared some data, thinking I might be called upon to answer some questions in regard to the bill; but since I am able to discover no opposition to it, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks at this point and to include some of the data I have on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, the data to which I have referred are as follows:

PURPOSE OF BILL

The purpose of this bill—H. R. 4539—is to extend the hop-marketing provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act for another 2 years to cover the crop years of 1940 and 1941. The 1938 amendment to the A. A. A. permitting hops to come under the provisions of that act for the crop years 1938 and 1939 proved by experience that it was of great benefit not only to the hop growers but to the dealers and brewers as well. So beneficial, in fact, have been these hop-marketing agreements that, whereas prior to their adoption there was much doubt and skepticism as to their value and practicability, now all those engaged in the industry are of the opinion that without the agreements it would be difficult for the industry to function at all.

From the viewpoint both of necessity and workability, the production and sale of hops through marketing agreements is the ideal solution to the problem of overproduction. In the first place, practically all the hops produced in the United States are grown in three States—Oregon, Washington, and California—the State of Oregon producing nearly half of the entire hop output of the country. All of these hops are raised on farms not exceeding in number 1,300, so that the number of growers involved is exceedingly small.

In the second place, hops are practically a "one use" commodity, about 99 percent of all hops grown in the United States being used exclusively in the manufacture of beer, ale, and other fermented malt beverages. When surpluses are produced which are not required by domestic brewers or for export, hops cannot find other market outlets. The number of purchasers, like the number of growers, is small. This fact, together with the fact that the interests of the growers, dealers, and brewers are the same, in that it is for the benefit of all to have a stabilized, profitable industry, makes the marketing agreements not only highly desirable but definitely workable. As evidence of this, attention is called to the fact that the hop-control board, functioning under the Federal hop-marketing agreement and order, at its annual meeting held in Salem, Oreg., May 8 and 9, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill, designated as H. R. 4539, which would extend to September 1, 1942, the period of time during which hops would be covered by the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended; and

Whereas the successful operation to date of the hop-control program merits the continuation of said program for an additional period of time in order that the purposes of the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, may be accomplished for the growers of hops and for the benefit of the hop industry as a whole:

Resolved, That this control board, consisting of the elected representatives of the hop growers, hop dealers, and brewers, hereby does approve and does urge the early enactment of the aforesaid bill, designated as H. R. 4539, in order that the hop-control program may be continued for the further period of time specified in said bill; and

Resolved, That the secretary of this board shall notify the members of the congressional delegation from the hop-producing States and other Members of the Congress of this action by this board.

MARKETING AGREEMENT FOR HOPS

(1) The marketing agreement for hops for the 2 crop years 1940 and 1941 will seek to improve the purchasing power of hop growers primarily by correcting what appears to have been the principal cause of unsatisfactory prices, namely, too many hops available for sale in years of large production.

(2) The marketing agreement will fix the maximum quantity of hops which may be marketed from the 1940 and 1941 crops, which will be termed "the salable quantity of hops." This quantity will be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture following the public hearings. Each producer of hops will share equitably and ratably in this quantity in proportion to the volume of his 1940 production and allocations to growers made on the following basis:

(A) An estimate will be made prior to the harvest of each grower's production.

(B) Each grower will be informed of the estimate of his production and also the estimate of total production of the Pacific coast crop.

(C) Time will be allowed each grower for appeal after notice of estimate.

(D) Each grower will thereafter be advised of his allotment or percentage of his 1940 production which he may market in interstate or foreign commerce. This allocation will be calculated on the basis of the percentage between the estimated total 1940 hop production and the salable quantity of hops as fixed in the agreement.

(E) For the program to be most effective it is desirable that growers will adjust their harvest of hops to that quantity which will be indicated in the notice of allotment.

(3) The growers' allocation committee, composed of the grower and grower-dealer members of the control board, will, with the assistance of the advisory committee in each State, supervise the estimate of production of each grower and recommend the allotments.

(4) The control board will be composed of the following representative members: Eight growers, two dealers, two grower-dealers, and four brewers.

(5) The salable quantity of hops to be marketed from the 1940 crop, it is believed, will be fixed in the agreement by the Secretary of Agriculture to be 29,600,000 pounds.

This marketing agreement will enable the growers to adjust their production to the demand. It will enable them to produce hops at a profit instead of at a loss. While it benefits the grower, it will harm no one else. It will stabilize and perpetuate a great industry upon which thousands of people in the Pacific Northwest are dependent for their livelihood.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, being from Oregon, I am, of course, heartily in favor of this bill. However, it is not necessary for me to go into a further discussion of the bill.

I am equally interested in another matter, pertaining to filberts in our State, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and include therein a brief report on this industry by the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the filbert industry is an important one in the State of Oregon. Over 98 percent of the commercial production of filberts in the United States is in Oregon and Washington. Of this 98 percent, 86 percent is in the State of Oregon. In 1927, it is estimated, the production of filberts in western Oregon and Washington did not exceed 50 tons. This was increased in 1932 to 351 tons and in 1938 in excess of 2,200 tons, which was a year of low production. When the present acreage comes into full production, the industry will probably reach 5,000 tons. Oregon State College reports that there are at least 400,000 acres of strictly first-class filbert land in the Willamette Valley.

The protection of the market for this essential crop of Oregon and Washington is important. The 7-year average price received for filberts for the period of 1930-36 was 12.1 cents per pound. In 1932 Italian filberts were quoted at 4 cents to 41/2 cents per pound delivered c. i. f. New York, without duty. After the duty was paid, the price was as low as 11 cents, which undermines the local market, to the destruction of the domestic producer.

In the reciprocal-trade agreement just negotiated with Turkey the duty on shelled filberts was reduced from 10 cents to 8 cents. Under the 10-cent duty, the United States imported $336,000 worth of shelled filberts in 1938. There is an excellent American market for this agricultural product, which is a growing industry in the West. American growers are entitled to protection in this market. The reciprocaltrade agreement should be modified to give this protection. Our filbert producers, as well as the producers of walnuts and other nut crops, should not be placed on parity with India, Turkey, and other countries with low standards of living and low wages. Senate bill S. 1333 and its companion, H. R. 5521, providing for an increase in tariff on filberts, should be enacted into law to give this protection.

A factual and informative brief prepared by Mr. R. A. Ward, of the agricultural committee of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, showing the necessity for this legislation is as follows:

BRIEF OF AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE REQUESTING SUPPORT OF LEGISLATION TO INCREASE TARIFF ON FILBERTS, BY THE PORTLAND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

(By R. A. Ward)

Your agricultural committee recommends that Portland Chamber of Commerce go on record in support of Senate bill S. 1333, providing for an increase in the tariff on filberts. This is the only crop or commodity produced in Oregon on which our own State has practically a monopoly on its production. Over 98 percent of the commercial production of filberts in the United States is in the commercial production of filberts in the United States is in the States of Oregon and Washington. Of this 98 percent over 86 percent is in the State of Oregon. Therefore, it is distinctly an Oregon industry and deserves all of the support we can give it. At the present time there are in excess of 12,000 acres planted to filberts in Oregon and Washington. According to the brief submitted before the Committee for Reciprocity Information by all of the nut growers' associations in Oregon and Washington, as well as the private packers in Portland and other cities in Oregon, the the private packers in Portland and other cities in Oregon, the value of the filbert properties in Oregon and Washington is approximately $8,400,000. The report of the Department of Agriculture for 1935 shows 3,483 producers of filberts in Oregon and 1,384 producers in the State of Washington, as of that date. Those who are familiar with the great increase in plantings made in the years 1936 to 1939 believe that probably 5,500 producers are now engaged in filbert production. About 97 percent of this immense acreage has been planted in the past 17 years. At present approximately 47 percent of the acreage is not bearing and another 29 percent is not yet in full bearing; thus, only about 24 percent of the total filbert acreage is in full bearing at this time. In 1927 the commercial tonnage of filberts produced in western Oregon and Washington probably did not exceed 50 tons. In 1932 commercial production was 351 tons. In 1938 production was in excess of 2,200 tons, and the 1938 season was a year of low production compared with the year 1937. It is obvious that when in excess of 2,200 tons, and the 1938 season was a year of low production compared with the year 1937. It is obvious that when the present plantings come into full production the industry will face the problem of disposing of burdensome surpluses. Production Outlook, circular No. 12, issued in 1937, states:

"Although very few filbert orchards are in full bearing it is possible the before 1945 the Occara Washington files the control of t sible that before 1945 the Oregon-Washington filbert crop will reach the 5,000-ton level."

I believe this estimate to be conservative. Bulletin No. 351 of Oregon State College states:

"There are at least 400,000 acres of strictly first-class filbert land

"There are at least 400,000 acres of strictly first-class infert land in the Willamette Valley."

Cultivation cost of the present acreage of filberts is around $120,000 annually. Picking, packing, washing, drying, and marketing requires an additional annual outlay of approximately another $120,000. From this it can be seen that the industry is a sizable one.

The Oregon filbert grower is faced with a probable overproduction. He has two methods available to assist in meeting this problem. One of these is the institution of an extensive advertising campaign to increase the consumption of filberts. This has already started in a small way. The other is the raising of existing tariffs to protect the American market from importations of the poor quality, cheaply produced Mediterranean filberts.

The cost of producing filberts per pound is a variable figure, depending upon age of orchard, soil, and climatic conditions. For pending upon age of orchard, soil, and climatic conditions. For example, the cost of producing filberts per pound in 1932, on 32 orchards, averaged 13.2 cents per pound. In 1933, a year of very heavy crop, the cost on 45 orchards amounted to 7½ cents per pound. The brief submitted by the nut growers' associations gives an average production cost of around 11 cents per pound. Another figure shows that in orchards where the yield is under 400 pounds to the acre the average cost is 14½ cents per pound. The average net price received by Willamette Valley filbert growers for filberts sold in the shell during the 7-year period 1930-36 is as follows:

1930-36, is as follows:

Crop year:	Cents

7-vear average_ As before stated, the bulk of the filberts imported come from the Mediterranean Basin. Italy Spain and Turkey are the chief centers of production. Over a 7-year period the annual produc-tion in these three countries has been 84,800 short tons. Of this amount 82,502 tons have been exported. The importation of filberts into the United States has been as follows:

Filberts also have to compete with many other nuts, many of which are protected by higher specific duties. Herewith is shown the specific duty and the approximate ad valorem equivalent duty on nuts imported into the United States. This also shows the pounds imported in 1937 and the value thereof:

From this it can be seen that on an ad valorem basis the present tariff on filberts is too low. In years of heavy production abroad foreign nuts come in at a very low price. In 1932 Italian Naples filberts were quoted at from 4 to 4½ cents per pound, delivered c. i. f. New York, without duty. Duty-paid landed cost on filberts has been as low as 11 cents. These prices are disastrous to the domestic producer.

The point has been raised that an increase in tariff would increase the costs of filberts to the consumer. If any such increase took place it would be infinitesimal. The present consumption of took place it would be infinitesimal. The present consumption of filberts in the United States is about four-one hundredths of a pound per capita per annum. The filbert is not a staple article of food—it is a specialty product and is somewhat of a luxury. The matter of consumer costs does not greatly enter into discussion. At the present time it is a holiday nut—that is, it is sold chiefly during the holiday season, principally in mixed nuts. Until recently I have found it impossible to buy in ordinary retail stores filberts by themselves when visiting eastern cities. Usually they are sold with mixed nuts. Herewith is given the consumption of nuts per capita compiled on November 1, 1938, by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture:

The bulk of the domestic filbert production is sold in the shell, as American producers cannot afford to shell them in competition with the very low labor costs existing in Turkey, which now supplies the United States with 65 percent of all of the shelled filberts that come into this country. The balance are imported from Italy and Spain. However, the northwestern filbert growers are going to have to shell a substantial portion of the crop if it is to be marketed. The present duty of 10 cents per pound on shelled filberts is insufficient to prevent the importation of filbert kernels into this country from Turkey Italy, and Spain, where much of the into this country from Turkey, Italy, and Spain, where much of the work is done with very cheap labor—frequently in homes—without the stringent State or Federal laws under which the American out the stringent State or Federal laws under which the American product must be packed. In 1938 foreign-shelled filberts, duty paid, were offered as low as 24 cents per pound in New York. This is a much lower price than the American grower can meet.

In the reciprocal-trade agreement just negotiated with Turkey the duty on shelled filberts was reduced from 10 cents to 8 cents. This amounts to 46 percent ad valorem (1938 basis). Under the 10-cent duty the United States imported $336,000 worth of shelled filberts in 1938. In attempting to justify this reduction the State Department pointed out additional competition to our filbert industry when it stated that $3,535,000 worth of shelled cashew nuts, $518,000 of shelled almonds, and $1,417,000 of shelled Brazil nuts were imported in 1938. There is no duty on unshelled cashew nuts were imported in 1938. There is no duty on unshelled cashew nuts and only a 2-cent duty on shelled cashews. Under this low 2-cent duty 27,000,000 pounds of cashews were imported in 1938, chiefly from India. This Board should give consideration to protecting our from India. This Board should give consideration to protecting our filbert and our walnut industry as well, by working for a substantial increase in the duty on cashew nuts and also Brazil nuts.

The American growers of filberts have a right to the American market, insofar as they can supply it. The United States was built up and has prospered under a protective tariff policy. The tariff is not an instrument for raising prices in this country or defrauding the consumer. It is, as the words "protective tariff" indicate, a means of equalizing the price of competitive imports so as to protect our domestic industry against the products of lowso as to protect our domestic industry against the products of lowcost foreign labor.

I am informed that in California all of the large chambers of commerce—San Francisco, Los Angeles, Oakland, etc.—have always fought consistently for tariffs to protect their walnut and almond industry. As before stated, the filbert industry is our only monopoly industry and everything that can possibly be done to develop and protect it should be done by this chamber and other organizations who can help.

Incidentally, there are many members of this organization who are filbert producers, and they include some of the largest producers in the State. There are also processors and packers of Oregon filberts who are members of this chamber and who have joined forces with the producers in this attempt to increase the duty on filberts. It is sincerely hoped that this chamber of commerce will do all it can to support them.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, personally I surely would have no reason to stand up here and oppose my two worthy colleagues from Oregon, but I think it is only fair at this time to call the attention of every Member of this House to the unfairness of keeping on enacting legislation that only includes a small part of our agricultural life. We are appropriating millions of dollars to certain crops that represent but little over one-third of the national farm income.

These 1,300 hops farmers are not going to make much of an impression, but at this time I want to call this particular point to the attention of the Members of this House, because it is coming up more and more every day. I want to repeat the statement that we are appropriating this money to farm crops that represent but little over one-third of the national farm income.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman understands, I am sure, that no money is appropriated in this bill. There are no parity payments. The growers are paid nothing for reducing their crops and no financial element is involved.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; but I just wanted to put the statement in the Record the way I said it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state in that connection that the soil payments and the marketing agreements apply to practically all crops, the soil payments applying to all commodities and the marketing agreements applying to all commodities which desire to be included. The parity payments apply only to those surplus crops where there is an effort to have some adjustment and none of the other commodities wanted to be included in this adjustment program at the time these commodities were included.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill S. 1579, which is a similar bill, be taken up and considered in lieu of the House bill, and that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the provisions of the House bill inserted as an amendment, and the Senate bill, as amended, be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a similar bill be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable", approved April 13, 1938, is amended to read as follows:
"Sec. 3. No orders issued pursuant to section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, shall be applicable to hops after September 1, 1942."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 4539) was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement published by the Texas Investment Bankers Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order of the House previously entered, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE DOWNWARD TARIFF REVISION UNDER TRADE TREATIES

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily, inasmuch as the subject of trade treaties has been so thoroughly discussed during the last week in this body, I would hesitate to bring up the subject at this time, were it not for the fact that it is a matter of the very greatest importance to the people of this country. I do not think we can discuss the trade-treaty program too much, because it is one thing that ought to be brought to the attention of the American people and it will only be brought to their attention, so far as the actual facts in the case are concerned, by a discussion on this floor.

I may have bored this membership by frequent references to the subject, but I consider it a duty that we owe the producers of this country and I believe we should continue this sort of procedure. While I may be "ringing the changes" in the statements I make from time to time, I propose to keep up this discussion until I feel I have exhausted the subject, and that will be when the act is repealed.

There is another interesting detail that has been discussed here, although perhaps not having any very direct bearing on trade treaties, and that is the subject of the purchase of Argentine beef. I do not need to discuss that matter today other than to draw the conclusion that this administration prefers to aid in disposing of foreign products rather than American products of any kind whatsoever. The statement made by the President a week ago is right along this same line-build up foreign trade at the expense of our own American trade. This is absolutely contrary to my theory of our duty to the American people.

The whole purpose of the trade-treaty program, Mr. Speaker, is to tear down our tariffs on foreign products so as to make possible increased importations which, in turn, displace the products of our own farms and factories, as well as the products of American labor.

I prefer to see us follow lines that will build up our American farming industry and our American labor instead of providing markets for foreign products.

Let us see just what has happened to the rates under the tariff acts. They have been drastically reduced on over 1,000 articles, and over one-third of these reductions have been to the full 50 percent permitted under the Reciprocal Trade Act. I say "permitted" advisedly. The law so states that the tariff rates can be reduced 50 percent, but the fact that that law is on the statute books does not make it constitutional in my judgment. Approximately half of the reductions amount to 40 percent or more. Two-thirds of the reductions are of 30 percent or more.

In a number of instances, the most outstanding of which is sugar, the rates were reduced under the so-called flexible tariff provisions and subsequently reduced under the treaty program, thus going beyond the 50-percent limitation. I think that is a direct infringement on both laws. It was never intended that the tariff rates under the reciprocal treaties should be reduced beyond 50 percent of the act of 1930, but in these instances that 50 percent has been in-

It is well to consider now where these drastic reductions are taking us. For comparative purposes let us see how the reduced rates measure up against the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act of 1922, and even our Democratic friends for the most part concede that this was a moderate law. You have not heard a great deal of criticism of the Fordney-McCumber Act on the part of the Democratic majority. The criticism has been more an attack on the Hawley-Smoot Act in which they claim the rates were excessive, which, of course, we do not admit. Of the 1,050 reductions in duty made under the trade treaties, not including the recent Turkish agreement or the bilateral Cuban agreement, 928 are comparable with the rates in the 1922 act. Seven hundred and seventy-six of these reduced rates, or approximately 84 percent, are below the level of the comparable rates of the act of 1922. Think of it! Over eighttenths of the reductions have been below the level of the 1922 rates, and still our Democratic friends are saying they are not injuring American industry. This means that they are off in the direction of free trade, similar to that of the Underwood Act of 1913, enacted during the Wilson administration. That is exactly where this present administration is taking us. They are taking us toward the conditions that existed under the Underwood Act, at the breaking out of the war and following, until the Republican Party came into power and repealed that iniquitous law.

Here is some further startling information. Of the items on which reductions have been made the duty in the case of more than one-half was not increased when the 1930 act went into effect. Bear that in mind. Over one-half of the comparable rates under the 1922 act were retained in the 1930 act. Hence it cannot be argued that in this instance the trade treaty merely restored the 1922 rates, since the 1922 rates were never increased.

Let us analyze these several hundred odd reductions and see where they were distributed in the various schedules of the tariff act. In the chemical, oil, and paint schedule there were 104 reductions; in earth and earthenware, 99; and in manufactures and metals, 246. There were 246 reductions in the latter schedule alone, undoubtedly all of them competitive with articles manufactured in this country. In wood and manufactures, 12; in sugar, molasses, and manufactures thereof, 6; in tobacco and manufactures thereof, 4. Here is an interesting one: In agricultural products and provisions there have been 160 reductions and still our good Democratic friends say that they are the friends of agriculture and the friends of the farmer and are legislating in their behalf. There are 160 reductions from the tariff act in that schedule. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen] whom I notice listening to me whether he approves of that procedure on the part of the Democratic Party?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am absolutely opposed to the policy and that it is contrary to what the President promised the farmers in 1932 when he said he would not reduce any of the agricultural schedules.

Mr. TREADWAY. But that was when he was a candidate trying to pass out the good word for the benefit of the voters. That promise and many others have not been lived up to in my opinion.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman, and could the gentleman state the items that have been cut?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have referred to these items many times. They are well known.

The 160 reductions we have just been referring to are where the farmer "gets it in the neck," without sticking his head out with any expectation of getting it there. In other words, it is where the farmer is being "sold down the river" by the present administration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. Briefly, because I have a lot that I want to get in.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then, I will just waive it.

Mr. TREADWAY. No. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman recall that back in 1935 the representatives from the Department of Agriculture assured us they were going to put the farmers of Michigan out of the sugar-beet business because we could get sugar cheaper from the offshore area?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is nothing different than the Argentine beef situation. We might just as well say, as any other person, that you can buy these goods cheaper. Why do we not equip our Army and Navy with uniforms made abroad? They can make them cheaper than we can.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not let the Chinese furnish us children? [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it is logical to follow that line. Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This morning some members of the Committee on Agriculture received some figures from Louisiana showing that the farmers down there are plowing up every other row of sugarcane. Those figures showed that 38,000 acres are being plowed up so that foreign producers of sugar may ship more sugar into the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has there ever been a time since this administration came into power that Cuba and other sugarproducing countries have not been favored over the beetsugar producers of Michigan and the cane-sugar producers of Louisiana? I do not know of any time that our people, either in Michigan or in Louisiana or any other sugar-beet or cane-raising sections, have been given less consideration by this administration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield. Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true that this good-neighbor policy is getting us an invitation from the King and Queen to go over there next fall?

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course, if you receive a social visit from a party, you are expected to return the call. I believe that is the plan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And is that ample compensation for the destruction of our sugar factories?

Mr. TREADWAY. Not exactly. I think you will find there will be something of a financial consideration brought up before this visit is over, the same as occurred with the President of Nicaragua last week. I do not think it is entirely social, this demonstration we are about to receive.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I assume the gentleman has noticed that in the first 3 months of this year Japan has shipped in more than 17,000,000 yards of unbleached cotton as against 4,000,000 yards a year ago; that the cotton goods shipped in from Japan were not made from American cotton but came from Brazilian cotton.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, certainly. Our friends on the other side have been very anxious about taking care of cotton, but they have not accomplished anything along that line.

Now, I would like to call attention to some of these other reductions. In cotton manufactures, the very item the gentleman just spoke of, there have been 41 reductions. In wool manufactures, 61; in silk, 21. Paper and books-and I represent a paper-producing constituency—there have been 46 reductions. In the sundries schedule there were 185. Think of it, my friends! Over 1,000 reductions in all under the reciprocal treaties below the prevailing rates of duty.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota spoke a moment ago about a list of these reductions. I had expected to ask permission to put that list into the RECORD some little time past. It is in print. The Tariff Commission has furnished it. It contains over 125 pages. I thought it was information that the American people ought to have, and so when the British reductions were announced I asked the Public Printer how much it would cost to insert just that list in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD. As I am not one of this strong spending group, I decided I would not ask to put it in, as the Public Printer estimated it would cost over $900 for the British reductions alone, which are about half the total number. It was rather a large figure, from my conception of finances up in Massachusetts, but nevertheless it might be well worth it if it would be well circulated among the American people.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does not the gentleman believe it would be money well spent to let the people have this information?

Mr. TREADWAY. I thoroughly believe in that; but, nevertheless, I am sure that I for one would be criticized if I asked permission to insert it in the RECORD, and I do not do so, but I do think the people ought to know the way their industries are being abused by the present administration along this

Here is a suggestion, however: If you have not already received a copy of this pamphlet you ought to get one. Every Member of Congress should have a copy of this in his office. Look it over with a view to how these reductions apply in your respective districts, and tell your people what the Democratic Party has been doing here in the last 5 years to their interests. The folks generally do not know it. Let them know it. Nothing could be better, as I see it, than next year to use this document in the campaign. Have it right in your pocket next year when you go around among your constituents. For example, if you live in the Corn Belt, take this book with you when speaking to farmers and turn to page 16 and show them what the New Deal administration has done toward taking care of the hog producer. They reduced the tariff from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound under the Canadian trade treaty-a 50-percent reduction. That would be nice information to give your folks.

Last Friday I was talking with one of my colleagues about the duty on coal. Here is an interesting situation. Congress a few years back imposed an import excise tax of 10 cents a hundredweight put on coal, except where treaty provisions interfered. Under our treaty with the Netherlands coal is admitteed free. We have no trade-treaty agreement with Russia, but give her most-favored-nation treatment, which means that Russian coal also comes in free despite the import tax of $2 per ton. I see my friend from Pennsylvania listening. I doubt very much if he is in favor of that method of procedure, taking off a duty that Congress actually put on because for sooth we made a bargain with some other country. Could anything be more ridiculous to the Yankee trader? We have a little horse trading up in our country, but honestly we try to get a fairer bargain and get our end of the trade. We may get fooled, but we do not go into it open-eyed the way the Democratic Party has gone into the trade-treaty program, and the Democratic majority of this House has been willing to allow this policy to continue. There is not a congressional district, Mr. Speaker, in the United States which does not have a direct interest in the reductions which have been made.

The title of this book to which I have been referring is "Changes in the Import Duties Since the Passage of the Tariff Act of 1932." I said the book contained 125 pages. I am mistaken—I am always modest in my statements, you know—I made a mistake, it covers 172 pages.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say this administration had reduced the rates on coal?

Mr. TREADWAY. There was an excise tax on imported coal of 10 cents per hundredweight, but because of a treaty made with the Netherlands under which coal was admitted free, we had to extend the same terms to Russia and now Russian coal comes in free.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman consider that fair to the mine owners and John Lewis' miners? How can John collect that money from the miners and turn it over to the New Deal campaign fund if they let coal in free?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not basing my argument solely on the coal item, but on the whole trade-treaty program. It is not fair to a single American citizen. [Applause.] I do not make any exception for one man over another.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The point I was trying to make was how Lewis could make these collections from the miners who dig coal in this country, and turn it over to the New Dealers if we let foreign coal in free. That does not seem quite square.

Mr. TREADWAY. This coal item is merely an incident. I am calling attention to the whole trade-treaty program.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any figures to show how much coal has been brought in from the Netherlands since this trade treaty was entered into?

Mr. TREADWAY. No: I have not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think any will be brought in?

Mr. TREADWAY. No, I do not think so; there ought not to be

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Considerable Russian coal was being brought into the United States, so much so in fact that we put on this excise tax of 10 cents a hundredweight, or $2 a ton.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and Russian coal is still being brought into this country. I think the tax was a proper one to protect the miners down in the gentleman's section.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct. Mr. TREADWAY. Recently a number of interesting speeches have been made on this general subject, and I wish more would be made, Mr. Speaker. I particularly commend the subject matter to our new colleagues. It is my impression—and I think this will be borne out—that this subject was one of the principal issues in every district in which the new men beat the Democrats in the last campaign, and I thank these gentlemen for coming in here and making their remarks.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. THILL. The trade-treaty program was one of the outstanding factors in the campaign in Wisconsin.

Mr. TREADWAY. In every district.

Mr. THILL. In every district.

Mr. TREADWAY. How many seats did the Republicans gain in Wisconsin?

Mr. THILL. Eight seats in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. TREADWAY. And we hope to get that many from a number of other States in the next campaign.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If we continue with these reciprocal-trade agreements I figure that it will not be long until we have lost practically all of our markets in this country to foreigners. Does it seem fair that the 130,000,000 American people who create a market as extensive as that created by 500,000,000 Europeans and 1,000,000,000 Asiatics, should have their interests sacrificed and their market taken away from them under these reciprocal-trade agreements?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; certainly not. The only men who have made any sort of argument for these trade treaties was a group of men who wanted to sell automobiles in foreign countries. If the American wage scale is maintained we would sell more automobiles to our citizens than would be purchased in Europe in 10 years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman recall that we lent China the money with which to buy the automobiles we sold her?

Mr. TREADWAY. I hope it will be the same with the money that is going down to Nicaragua and these other southern countries under this friendly relations procedure. I do not see that this friendly relation game, peace and good will among men, is keeping the world at peace; but if we carried out the theories of Secretary Hull we would not have any place to ship our goods. We would not have any markets or anything else.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman tell me just where this profit will come in when we lend China $50,000,000 and they turn around and buy automobiles with that money?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am surprised the gentleman asks me questions of that sort. He should ask them of the ones who advocate the trade-treaty program.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman has the answer.

Mr. RICH. If he would put the question up to the Members on the other side of the House, there would not be anybody here to answer them. They have practically all gone. Whenever you start to talk about reciprocal-trade agreements you scare them out. They have all left the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is one reason why I am telling

Mr. TREADWAY. That is one reason why I am telling them this sort of story. I know they do not want to hear me and I do not give a rap whether they do or not, if the American people will listen to me.

Mr. RICH. We want to drive them clear out of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. We want a few Democrats left in order to have fair competition.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 additional minutes beyond my time. I understand there are no other special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman says he would like to have some Democrats left. Does not the gentleman differentiate between Democrats and new dealers?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, very distinctly. This New Deal is a third party. Of course, the gentleman has read and heard and I have read and heard that there is likely to be a third party candidate next year, a New Deal candidate, and a real old-fashioned Democratic candidate. That would be all right for us.

Mr. MICHENER. After Mr. Farley makes his trip across the continent, followed by the President within a few days, does not the gentleman think we will have a more general idea whether or not we are going to have a New Deal Democratic candidate or a Democratic and a New Deal candidate? Mr. TREADWAY. I think we are going to have the two. I may say, in answer to the gentleman, that if all precedent of history is superseded next year and the present occupant of the White House runs for a third term, there will be a real Democratic candidate run against him.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes, certainly.

Mr. RICH. This gentleman is a Jeffersonian Democrat.

Mr. TREADWAY. Absolutely. I have a little more information I want to give the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of the fact that so many Republicans joined this so-called New Deal Party, will the gentleman tell us if he is going to be a member of this New Deal Party next year?

Mr. TREADWAY. The experience has been such that they are all sorry. Those Republicans were misled, and they have seen the error of their ways and have come back into the fold. They are just waiting for a chance to get at the New Deal Democrats next year. There is no question about that.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the last official result we had in November shows they are still there.

Mr. TREADWAY. We will stand by the November results and prophesy they will be duplicated and triplicated next year.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. Do those Republicans who joined with the New Deal now intend to fight the New Deal by joining up with the Townsend organization?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not heard there was such a party as that. The New Deal Republicans are back in the Republican fold, as shown by the 82 new Members of the House elected from the various States.

Mr. HOOK. Did not the gentleman hear of the Townsend group last summer?

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman talks about the Townsend movement. I may say to him that the New Deal has made it impossible for a man over 45 years of age to get a job in this country. The old people do not know what to do. They want to work and have not the opportunity to work. You would not have the demand that there is today in this country for consideration on the part of the old people of this country if they could get a job. He had better look into the New Deal and see what they have done to the aged people of this country as well as to the young people. A young man or young woman looking for a job in this country today cannot find one, as they were in the habit of being able to do before the New Deal came into being.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.
Mr. STEFAN. I do not want to inject myself into any political controversy, because I am not going to take any part in a political fight.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course not.

Mr. STEFAN. But I would like to make a contribution to the discussion on the coal question, if the gentleman does not mind referring back to that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not at all. Everything goes. This is a free afternoon.

Mr. STEFAN. The other day we passed an appropriation bill making appropriations for the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments, carrying a total sum of around $121,000,000. I doubt that very many Members of the House read the hearings which came to you separately as to the Commerce Department. In view of the fact we were discussing the coal question, I wish to refer the Members of the House to page 396 of the hearings on the appropriations for the Commerce Department, where you will find a statement of Norman Patton, representing the Anthracite Institute of New York, to this effect:

In regard to the anthracite industry, the situation is simply this: We have a very distressed and depressed industry in that we have lost well over half of our markets. We have 60,000 unemployed miners, and entire communities in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are wholly dependent on the taxes derived from our industry. We have lost our markets to competitive fuels both in the United States and in Canada, and that loss of market has been due, in large measure, to the importation of foreign fuels—foreign fuel oil, for instance, from Venezuela, and foreign anthracites from as far away as French Indochina, Russia, Wales, Scotland, and other countries.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman very much. I hope if there is more of that statement the gentleman will insert it in the Record.

I am glad to see that a few of our Democratic friends have arrived on the scene from lunch, including our Speaker and the majority leader. I am delighted to have them in the audience. It might just possibly be that I could give them a little more information about the trade-treaty program, but I shall not presume to do so at this time. However, I shall be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. I was quite interested in the rejuvenation meeting that has been held across the aisle in the last few minutes. I am rather reluctant to butt in on it, but one of the speakers mentioned the great number of unemployed and the bad times prevailing. In spite of all these bad times and unemployment, does not the fact remain that in 1932, when the people took the Government back from the Republican Party the income of the American people was approximately $38,000,000,000, and in 1937, and last year, also, it was approximately double $38,000,000,000?

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I assumed when yielding to the gentleman that he was going to refer to how much he was pleased at the reduction of the cuties on citrus fruits in Florida. I have heard the gentleman elucidate that question quite materially. I was in hopes the gentleman was going to make that contribution to the good cause here but he turned to another subject. I know how he feels. He is one of the General Hancock type of believers in the tariff. He believes in a local tariff. He would like to protect the citrus fruits of Florida and sugar, but he is a little backward about protecting the industries in New England.

Mr. JOHNS rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and then I should like to proceed, if I may.

Mr. JOHNS. I should like to ask the gentleman a couple of questions. First, may I say to the gentleman that he is along in years, I'ke myself?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not admit it.

Mr. JOHNS. No. It is a fine thing always to be young but we do get along in years. We have heard a great deal said here about 1932. There are some of us here who are cld enough to remember 1892. Let me ask the gentleman whether he sees anything different in the reciprocal-trade treaties we now have from the old free trade we had in 1892?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no difference in the intention. The intention of the present administration is to get just as near to free trade as they possibly can. However, they are a little frightened, as I see it, by just such men as the gentleman from Florida. There are some of them who will not approve of this entire free-trade program; therefore, they are compromising it and doing it behind our backs and in the dark under the trade-treaty program, which is unconstitutional and should not be permitted.

Mr. JOHNS. Does the gentleman believe we are ever going to get back to normal in this country if we permit foreign countries which pay their labor about 30 cents a day to ship their products in here, while we pay our labor 75 or 80 cents an hour?

Mr. TREADWAY. The only way we will ever get back to normal is to make our duties on the goods they manufacture commensurate with the difference in cost of production there and here. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK and Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should like to continue my statement, if I may.

Mr. HOOK. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he wanted to go back to the Smoot-Hawley days?

Mr. TREADWAY. To what?

Mr. HOOK. The old tariff days.

Mr. TREADWAY. Smoot-Hawley?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. You give the voters the chance to tell you the truth as between the Smoot-Hawley tariff and the trade-treaty program next year, and you will find out what the answer will be. [Applause.] And it may affect the district the gentleman represents.

Mr. HOOK. They had their chance in 1932 and took it. Mr. RICH. And it may give the people of this country

Mr. RAYBURN rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I know this gentleman will have something to offer.

Mr. RAYBURN. I simply want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.
Mr. RAYBURN. Is it going to be the attitude of the gentleman's party next year in the campaign that they will repeal the right of anyone to make any sort of reciprocal trade arrangement?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. We are believers in reciprocal treaties of the McKinley type, not of the Roosevelt type. That is the difference. [Applause.] President McKinley, when he was chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee, as the gentleman from Texas so well knows, was an advocate of reciprocity, but where it did not affect competitive articles made in this country.

Mr. RAYBURN. We never did have any of it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts is now taking the position that his party usually takes, a position looking both ways to get them "gwine and comin'."

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the handy way. The gentleman from Texas would like to do the same.

Mr. RAYBURN. We stand for somebody having authority to make reciprocal trade arrangements, and when they do make them to increase the trade of this country we do not

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussion that has taken place, may I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EBERHARTER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a unanimous-consent request in behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts. In view of the fact he called attention to my presence on the floor, and that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], I would be perfectly willing for the gentleman to have more than 10 minutes with the hope that in the use of the time he might give us some real information on the question of reciprocal-tariff agreements.

Mr. TREADWAY. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that I was giving that information-

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was taking into consideration what the gentleman had already said and then expressing the hope he might give us some information. [Laughter and

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not believe the gentleman from Alabama was present when I was really giving them some information about the number of reductions and all that sort of thing. Later on I was interrupted, but I have some very useful information to submit if I can get these other gentlemen answered in time, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you very much for your kind contribution.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I want to yield first to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am through.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, might it not be well to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, the Speaker of the House [Mr. BANKHEAD], who professes his inability to understand certain things which were so ably discussed just now by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], to the statement of the Apostle St. Mark, who said:

Having eyes, see ye not; and having ears, hear ye not; and do ye not remember?

Or again, might it be proper to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] to the possibility that there may still be a people like unto those referred to by Isaiah when he said-

Make the heart of this people fat and make their ears heavy and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes and hear with their ears and understand with their heart and convert and be healed.

We are asking that our misguided brethren on the majority side, having reached years of maturity, "put away childish things" and meet the situation which now confronts us face to face, realizing at last that we are dealing with a condition and not with a theory.

Let me also call attention to the fact that while the gentleman from Florida stated that the national income had been increased under this administration, the fact is that any increase in income received under this administration is wiped out by increased spending; that no matter what the income may be, year after year, every year that this administration has been in power, it has gone into debt on an average of $3,000,000,000 per year. It makes no difference what they receive; they always spend more; they always increase the public debt.

Mr. TREADWAY. And even this morning I appeared before the Rules Committee aiding my Democratic friends in securing a change in the debt limitation or the debt arrangement because they have practically caught up now to the $45,000,000,000 limit, and if we stay here long enough and spend money the way the administration wants us to spend it, they they will have to raise the $45,000,000,000 limitation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And no matter what they get, do not they spend more than they get?

Mr. TREADWAY. I must agree that they have spent it very rapidly.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GORE. The other day we had a very interesting discussion of the question of the use of jute or cotton, and I wonder if the gentleman can enlighten us further on that Mr. TREADWAY. That is a back number, and I voted on that according to the wishes of my constituents.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman has made a very kind reference to the problems of the sugar farmer in Louisiana. May I construe his statements to mean that he is ready to support the sugar farmers in Louisiana in an effort to get an increased allotment?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no question about that. I have stated several times that the Louisiana sugar growers and the beet-sugar growers up in Michigan and in that entire section are entitled to supply our market rather than Cuba.

Mr. BROOKS. May I ask the gentleman further if his remarks can be extended to cover the remainder of the Republican New England delegation?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can only speak for one member of that group, but I can assure the gentleman that they believe in using American products rather than foreign products. Every one of them will subscribe to that.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on sugar?

Mr. TREADWAY. On sugar?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. On the sugar question I will refer the gentleman to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman has just stated he wanted to fix it so that the Louisiana sugar producers and the beet-sugar producers could supply the United States with sugar. Does the gentleman mean that he believes they should supply the United States with all its sugar?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no; we want to be fair with our foreign friends.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman want to bring about a condition under which Cuba could ship no sugar here?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no, indeed. Mr. RAYBURN. Well, how much would the gentleman permit them to ship here?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I will refer all sugar inquiries to the authority on sugar, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

Mr. RAYBURN. How much would the gentleman give the Louisiana sugar producers and how much would he give the beet-sugar producing States?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michi-

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to say to the distinguished leader that I believe that question can be very simply answered and at the same time we can conform to real American institutions. Why not let the American sugar-beet growers and the cane growers of Louisiana and Florida and the growers of Hawaii and Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands first grow all the sugar they want to grow toward supplying our market and then give the balance of our consumptive demands to Cuba and the Philippine Islands. I cannot see anything wrong with that.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it the gentleman's position that he wants to so subsidize these possessions of ours, in the United States and out, that they can raise all the sugar that the United States uses and not have any importations whatever from Cuba?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If our people desire to grow all of the sugar which we consume, and can do so at a cost not to exceed, we will say, the going average world retail price of sugar, then why should not our people be entitled to grow that sugar? If the gentleman means by that, would I subsidize them to that extent, indeed, I would.

Mr. RAYBURN. In other words, the gentleman would subsidize them to the point where we could not trade in sugar with Cuba?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No.

Mr. RAYBURN. The last time I looked it up, I say to the gentleman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY! vields-

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. RAYBURN. The barriers we had at that time were costing the consumer of American sugar about $300,000,000 a year. Is not that what the subsidization is costing them now?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the statement to the effect that it is costing our consumers about 300 millions per year is a dishonest presentation of the facts. That cannot be supported and that statement has not been supported, and if the gentleman desires, I will demonstrate it again. I shall answer him categorically within the next day or two.

Mr. RAYBURN. The last time I looked it up it was stated that it costs $300,000,000 a year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was so stated.

Mr. RAYBURN. What does the gentleman have to offset that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was stated that it was costing around $350,000,000 a year, but here are the facts: Let us assume that the world price on sugar today is $2 per 100 pounds, raw sugar, which is a little above the market. You can buy refined sugar in the Washington stores for $4.40 per 100 pounds, in 10-pound sacks. You can buy it for about $4.15 to $4.25 per 100 pounds in bulk, in 100-pound When the administration, or whoever it is undertakes to make the statement-and I do not care to state who now, though I could—when they say that the consumers of this country are being burdened with $350,000,000 per annum excess cost of sugar by reason of tariff protection on sugar, then they make a statement that cannot be supported by the facts. Turn it around the other way and deduct the $350,000,000 from our total sugar bill, and I ask this, Do you want the world, including the growers under the American flag, to furnish sugar far below the cost of production, as our other farmers are doing today on cotton and other products?

Mr. RAYBURN. How much does the gentleman say it is costing?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Tariff protection is not costing the consumers of sugar anything at all because of this fact: If you do not have tariff protection, which gives you a reasonable quantity of sugar produced under the American flag, you will be dependent upon foreign countries for your total supply of sugar, and they, the foreign producers, will impose a high cost on the housewives of the country per annum sufficient to pay for your entire sugar industry in the United States

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, that is begging the question. Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not begging the question.

Mr. RAYBURN. How much does the gentleman think it is costing, if it is not costing $300,000,000?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not costing them anything. The average person believes that when you raise the tariff on sugar, the price of sugar goes up, but when you raise the tariff on sugar almost invariably, so the sugar history shows, the price of sugar has gone down, and why? Because you increase the domestic production and more sugar comes into the market. That is the history of sugar in this country. Take your situation in 1930 when you increased the tariff. The price of sugar went down. There is no way by which you can tie an increased tariff to an increased price of sugar. It does not work that way. It did not work that way in England and it is not worked that way in this country.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman takes the position that the imposition that we make on sugar does not cost the American consumer anything?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I take that position.

Mr. RAYBURN. Would the gentleman take that position about other tariffs? Does the gentleman think they all work

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you get a response in domestic production, they will work that way.

Mr. RAYBURN. There are a lot of things that you do not get a response in, in the domestic product.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That may be. We are discussing sugar now, and I am qualifying on sugar.

Mr. RAYBURN. But the gentleman from Michigan claims he can demonstrate that the price of sugar does not go up when the tariff is imposed upon it. He has not demonstrated that as yet to me, and he is one of the most persuasive ex-Texans that I know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman, and I shall later demonstrate and answer very specifically when time permits.

Mr. RAYBURN. And I say to the gentleman that if at some time he could put it down somewhere where I could read in cold print that the tariff does not increase the cost of anything, it would be a wonderful thing to me, and one of the most enlightening things that has ever come to my mind.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall be glad to comply with the request of the majority leader. Now, let me restate my proposition so that it is clear, because this is something in which we are all interested. If the increase in tariff leads to a material increase in domestic production of that which is protected, you will invariably find that the increase in the tariff does not lead to an increase in the consumer's price of the commodity in question. That is just the history of com-

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is the gentleman in favor of putting the tariff at such a point that we will not buy any sugar at all from Cuba?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to make it very clear that I am in favor of my stated formula-

Mr. RAYBURN. Cuba is our neighbor. That is its stock in trade. In other words, here is something about the tariff that I have never been able to get over. I am not a free trader, of course, unless everybody is the same—that is, that if we do not buy something from the other countries of the earth they cannot buy from us; because the gentleman knows, and everybody else who has studied the question knows, that money does not cross the ocean to balance trades between countries. It is goods for goods. It is trading the surplus of one country for the surplus of the other. If we close the ports of America against the surpluses of the remainder of the world, under that same theory we automatically close the ports of the world against our surplus commodities, the commerce of America.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is great strength in the gentleman's argument.

Mr. RAYBURN. I doubt if even the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] would contend that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was a competitive tariff act. Was it a prohibitive tariff or was it a competitive tariff act?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, it was a competitive tariff act.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] would agree with me that the Smoot-Hawley tariff was more a prohibitive tariff than it was a competitive tariff.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, why has not the gentleman's party carried out its promise made in 1932 to repeal this iniquitous tariff bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. We have passed the law for reciprocaltrade agreements. That is the only way we can do it. We are trying to iron out some of these iniquities, and trade with the remainder of the world.

Mr. KNUTSON. But they are not reciprocal.

Mr. RAYBURN. In 1926, 1927, and 1928 we had reached the point where we had practically no commerce with the rest of the world.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is greatly mistaken. Our foreign trade continually increased during those years. In 1928 our exports amounted to over five billions, as against only three billions last year.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford]. I want to get a little time to talk on trade treaties. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not like to take the time from anybody, but this is a very important situation we have developed here, and I would like to just summarize it shortly. If the farmers of the United States, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands desire to grow the cotton which we consume, the sugar which we consume, the citrus fruits which we consume, and can do so at a price to the consumer which is not unreasonable, then why in the world should we not give those farmers that privilege? That is my formula. If it calls for an unreasonable tariff protection, that brings in an element which my formula does not provide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EBERHARTER). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a short question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] a question on the sugar situation. Can the gentleman tell me how much increase in the production of sugar there has been in the State of Michigan in the last 4 years?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is familiar with the figures. If he will look at last year's production, he will find a very material increase over the previous year.

Mr. TREADWAY. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Rayburn] that he has a very natural and very proper curiosity to learn whether or not a tariff on sugar results in increasing the cost of that commodity to the American people. On last Tuesday I spoke on the question of sugar, and at that time I discussed a certain period of our country's history. I spoke of the period from 1916 to 1923, inclusive, when, for various reasons, the American sugar industry did not produce in normal amounts. This covered the time when there were so many demands from all the warring European countries for all of the agricultural products this country could produce in order to supply their needs. During that time hand labor was at a premium in this country, and as a result the production of beet sugar dropped to a point where we did not produce enough sugar to give the offshore producer the sort of competition that he must have if the housewife of this country is to buy sugar at a reasonable price. I commend to my friend from Texas the figures in that speech. I do not have time to go into this question thoroughly at this time, but if the gentleman will read the speech, he will learn that during that period of 8 years-and, I repeat, which was during the time when we did not have enough domestic sugar on the market to provide competition for the offshore producers—it cost the consumers of this country during the full 8 years approximately $4,000,000,000 more than a reasonable price for that product in this country, or $500,-000,000 per year in addition to what would have been a reasonable price. As a matter of fact, the only time when the American housewife has paid more for her sugar than she should pay was when the Cuban and other offshore producers controlled the market and could charge what they pleased. No tariff on sugar spells just one thing, and that is an exorbitant price for this commodity. I commend that speech and those figures to my friend.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Texas had something to say about the good-neighbor policy and that we should buy from other countries, especially from neighboring countries. Does the gentleman from Texas recall that a few months ago a large importation of cotton from Brazil came to this country and was warehoused in Richmond for the use of manufacturers in North Carolina, and that the papers at that time said that it was only a question of time until Brazil would capture one-half the world's market for cotton? If that time ever comes, would the gentleman be in favor of buying one-half of our cotton needs from Brazil in order to show that we were friendly and good neighbors? I would like the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am willing to state to the gentleman, coming from a State that produces from one-third to one-quarter of all the cotton produced in the United States, that if it takes some trade in cotton with Brazil in order for us to sell some of our surpluses to Brazil and other sections of the world we will be willing to take it as American citizens.

[Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. That is a question of some future happening, but if it were the situation confronting us now the gentleman would sing another song.

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly the gentleman does not mean that; he does not mean to be funny.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is a good friend of mine, but the gentleman also knows that he would take a different stand if that were the situation that confronted us at this moment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am stating to the gentleman from Minnesota what I would be willing to do, but I admit that it is not a problem we face at the present moment.

Mr. KNUTSON. But we are rapidly approaching that time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no!

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, yes!

Mr. RAYBURN. We can produce in America better cotton and at a price that we can sell to the world because it is better cotton.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then why do you continually come in asking for subsidies for cotton if you can compete with the world?

Mr. RAYBURN. Just because of the policies adopted and the laws passed during 12 years of Republicanism. The reciprocal trade agreement program was inaugurated to cure those difficulties and to provide a way whereby we might exchange our surpluses.

Mr. KNUTSON. Cotton never has been in such desperate situation as it is now.

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly not. Mr. KNUTSON. It never has been in such desperate situation as it is now under the New Deal.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Probably one of the most discussed products affected by imports is shoes. My district is one that manufactures perhaps more women's shoes than any other district in the United States, and I make this very interesting comparison on the question whether trade agreements or imports of foreign products have a distressing effect on American industries, and no better illustration can be made than the matter of shoes.

Ninety percent of the shoes imported into this country came from Czechoslovakia, and when the Czechoslovakian shoe imports were entering this country at their peak in one city in my district alone out of 28 factories manufacturing shoes, 18 had closed their doors-18. In a city in which 75 percent of all the people work in shoe factories, we can appreciate what that importation did to the shoe industry in this country. What happened when those imports stopped? And the result will answer the question whether imports of shoes did any damage to our shoe industry.

When Germany went into Czechoslovakia last October the economic conditions of Czechoslovakia were such that exports of shoes from Czechoslovakia to this country practically stopped. From that time on the shoe industry in my district, which is more affected by imports of shoes from Czechoslovakia than any other part of the country, immediately started to rise; and business in that section of my district had never been so good for many, many years as from October to the present time as a result of the stopping of this importation of shoes. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. We are very glad, indeed, to hear that. Mr. Speaker, if the House will kindly indulge me for 10 minutes in addition to the last extension I had, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gore], but to none other. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes at the expiration of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gore].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to preface my question with the statement that, being a new Member, I have not spoken, but if the gentleman will not think me presumptuous I wou'd ask him to explain his answer to me. I asked the gentleman, a little while ago, to explain his vote on jute and cotton, and he gave two answers. I understood one of his answers-that he voted the way his constituents wished him to vote. I can understand that, because I have arrived at the inescapable conclusion that the gentleman, like the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] considers the tariff a local question.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; that is not correct.

Mr. GORE. But the second reason the gentleman gave was that it was a back number, and I am unable to follow his reasoning.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman misunderstood the reference. I was in a bit of a hurry to proceed with my remarks on reciprocal-trade treaties. What I referred to was the fact that the jute- and cotton-twine matter had been thoroughly discussed on the Post Office appropriation bill. That was the reference I had in mind when I said it was a back number.

Mr. GORE. Then, will the gentleman explain his position

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; when the measure is up before us I shall be delighted to explain it for the benefit of the Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the point where I was interrupted a little over half an hour ago. I was about to make some remarks to the effect that we wanted to enlist the sympathies and support of the new Members. I had referred to the fine speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL], who made a full and unanswerable exposition of the subject, pointing out in particular its effect on the dairy industry. Then the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Griswold] made several notable addresses on the subject of the trade treaties and their effect upon his people.

It would be well, in my opinion, if every Member undertook to do this with respect to the products of his own district and State. Only in this way can the facts be brought home to the people. Something needs to be done to give them a true picture of what is going on. At the present time, except for an occasional speech on this floor, they are hearing only one side of the question.

The State Department is flooding the country with its biased and misleading propaganda, and is sending its emissaries far and wide at public expense to stir up support for the treaty program. No attempt is ever made by the State Department to tell the people the great cost at which our concessions are obtained. That part of the story is carefully hidden from the people. It is up to the representatives of the people in Congress to let them know the true facts.

The other day the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCH-ENS] attempted to answer my charge that most of the speeches made in this body in favor of the treaty program have all the earmarks of having been prepared by the State Department. The gentleman in the course of his remarks inserted an editorial from the Terre Haute (Ind.) Star for April 22 entitled "It Works," and offered this editorial as evidence of public support of the program.

It is a very strange thing that on the same day that editorial, word for word, as it appeared in the Terre Haute (Ind.) Star, was published with the same caption in a paper in Saratoga, N. Y. In each case it bore the same heading and contained the identical language. Some day we are going to know how much the propaganda is costing the American people for just that sort of thing-passing out editorials, putting on movie shows, theatrical projects, and everything under the sun to advertise these trade-treaty programs. Is it not right that we Members of the House should occasionally address our remarks to that subject?

In order to get any information as to the real effect of the treaty program, it must be obtained from outside the Government departments, since they are all a part of the New Deal propaganda machine.

Numerous instances of the direct adverse effects of the tariff reductions which have been made under the treaty program can be shown. Not long ago I called attention to a circular being distributed by an English tailoring concern soliciting orders for men's suits with the information that because of the British trade treaty the British suits could now be purchased for $15 less than before.

That was borne out by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER], who received a direct communication from the people interested. Just the other day our colleague from New Jersey [Mr. Powers] called my attention to a letter he had received from a china manufacturer in his district in which it was stated that English bone china is now being sold at from 35 to 50 percent less than before the treaty came into effect. Of course, that means just one thing-that the English manufacturer is going to get the business at the expense of our own producers and at the expense of our own

The trade-treaty program is a business appeasement program for foreign producers; but it is a business-destroying program insofar as our own producers are concerned.

We have heard a good deal about business appeasement for Americans, but the trade-treaty program is intended to appease foreign producers.

The administration is solving the unemployment problem of the rest of the world under the treaty program but aggravating our own. The first evidence of improvement or the most recent evidence that has been submitted of an improvement in our condition is where the importation of shoes was cut off from Czechoslovakia. My colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Bates] has told you the effect of that so far as the shoe business is concerned in the district he represents. It applies to all districts just the same. As long as they can keep up this trade-treaty program, the administration is solving the unemployment problem for foreign countries. Likewise it is furnishing a market for the foreign farm surpluses and taking the market away from our American farmers.

The reductions in tariffs being made under the treaty program are inconsistent with recovery and reemployment. How can our manufacturers raise wage levels and working conditions for labor when they are forced to compete with the cheap labor of Europe and the Orient? They simply cannot do it. That is the answer, they cannot do it. That same subject has been brought up this afternoon in the course of the discussion.

How can our workers be provided with jobs when under the administration's tariff policy we are admitting more and more foreign products made by foreign labor, thereby displacing our own? That is a foolish question to ask. it answers itself.

How can we bring prosperity back for the farmer and restore parity prices under a program which gives up more and more of the home market to foreign producers and drives down the price level to that of the low-cost foreign products that are being brought in under drastically reduced rates? Of course, it is obvious that this cannot be done. It cannot be done even with the magic wand of the present admin-

A reasonable protective tariff which at least offsets the foreign cost-of-production advantage is absolutely essential to the maintenance of American wage and living standards.

While I said I would not pause for any further interruptions, if any of my Democratic friends want to answer that statement I will yield to them. It cannot be answered. It is a self-evident fact.

It is absolutely essential to the restoration of farm prices. It is absolutely essential to the existence of our vast industrial development. Why, Mr. Speaker, the first major enactment of the First Congress in 1789 was a protective tariff measure, and throughout all our history the tariff has been the backbone of our progress as a nation. The first major enactment of the First Congress in 1789 carried with it this very idea we are trying to get across here today 150 years afterward, and the experience of the Government has been that unless that tariff protection is maintained we must meet the wage scale of the foreign countries with which we are competing.

Here is one other thought I would like to leave with you: Two subjects that are predominant in the public mind today are neutrality and national defense. An adequate protective tariff contributes to both. During the consideration of the tariff bill of 1816 John C. Calhoun and Henry Clay lent their support to the cause of protection by arguing that economic independence of Europe was essential to real political independence. That is as true today as it was then.

Moreover, what could contribute more to national defense than to be economically independent insofar as possible of the rest of the world? We built Muscle Shoals so that we would not have to depend upon Chile for nitrates. We had a very sorry experience after the outbreak of the World War because we had always been dependent upon Germany for our dvestuffs.

Recently Congress has been considering legislation to lay in supplies of strategic war materials. One strategic war material is manganese, and that brings me back to the trade treaties once more. Under the Brazilian trade treaty this administration reduced the tariff on manganese by 50 percent and took away what little encouragement there was for the development of the American manganese industry. This is just another illustration of inconsistency and lack of foresight on the part of the administration.

In one of my recent speeches on the subject of trade treaties, I inserted a copy of a letter which the War Department addressed to the Ways and Means Committee during the consideration of the 1930 Tariff Act.

In that letter the Department asked that protection be extended to a certain industry because in the event of war its facilities would be used for the production of arms. Today the War Department has an arrangement with factories throughout the country for shifting over to the production of war materials. If these factories were not sustained in peacetimes by having a market here in the United States for their products, they would not be available in time of war.

In the defense measure which Congress passed there was an item for educational orders. Of course, the only purpose of this item was to get our plants used to the production of these war supplies. I do not want to stress the nationaldefense angle of the tariff too much, but it certainly is an important phase to keep in mind.

Then there is the question of patriotism. Some of those who protest their patriotism the most are among the first to encourage the use of foreign products. Even the President has come out in favor of buying Argentine beef, as I have previously pointed out.

My friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is a patriot of the first order when it comes to defending his country, but when it comes to the tariff he goes along with the President and Secretary Hull and advocates "Buy foreign."

The only purpose of the tariff is to give our home producers-our farmers, our working people, and our manufacturers—the first opportunity to supply the needs of the home market. Certainly that is their birthright. But this administration would deny it to them.

There is no reason and no justification for our buying goods from abroad that we can and do produce for ourselves. That is the basic objection to the present treaty program, in that it has resulted in lowering the tariff on foreign products that compete with and displace our own. Foreign trade of this character is not profitable. Nor is it fair to those groups of American producers who are being sacrificed in the mere hope of securing increased export markets for other groups of American producers.

That the treaty program has not been successful in opening up foreign markets for American products is evidenced by the fact that our exports last year were $255,000,000 less than in 1937. Had it not been for the large sales of war materials and supplies, the decline would have been much greater. While the treaty program is supposed to be dedicated to world peace, it is being sustained largely by the sale of these war materials.

Trade-treaty proponents point to the large favorable trade balance last year as an indication of the success of the treaty program.

However, they fail to look into the reason for such a favorable balance. It did not result from an increase in exports, because, as I have pointed out, exports declined last year. The real cause was the fact that our imports of raw materials declined more than our export trade, and this left us with an excess of exports over imports.

The decline in imports was not due to any tariffs imposed under the treaty program, because that is not its function. Rather, it seeks to destroy and undermine the existing tariffs.

The decline in imports resulted, as admitted in official Government publications, to which I have previously called the attention of the House, from a decline in purchasing power in the United States resulting from the present Roosevelt depression. Hence it is clear that the trade-treaty program has no connection whatever with last year's favorable trade balance.

What then has the treaty program accomplished? Certainly it has not achieved any of the objectives for which it was supposedly intended.

It has not expanded our export markets and it has not brought about peace. On the other hand, it has thrown the American home market open to ruthless foreign competition, which threatens our industries, further depresses our agricultural producers, and sacrifices the American wage earner.

The treaty program has been tried and found wanting. Like other New Deal experiments, it has aggravated, rather than remedied, the problem it was supposed to solve. It is on the way out. After the 1940 elections we are going to see in this country a restoration of the Republican protective tariff. This does not mean that reciprocity will be abandoned. Reciprocity has long been a cardinal Republican policy, of which the great McKinley was the chief proponent. But under real reciprocity-Republican reciprocity-the expansion of our foreign trade will go hand in hand with protection.

Adequate tariffs will be maintained on the products we can and do produce to assure our own people at least an equal chance with foreign producers in the home market.

We will use the great market in this country for things we need but do not produce ourselves in bargaining for export markets for our own surpluses. Under such a policy, no American interest will be injured, but all will benefit. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point, following the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] a statement in answer to his argument as presented on this floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the statement to which I refer is as follows:

[From Commerce Reports of February 18, 1939] 1938 RESULTS UNDER THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM (Albert J. Hutzler, Trade Agreements Unit)

During the year 1938, United States exports to both the group of 17 countries with which reciprocal-trade agreements had been concluded, and to the group of nonagreement countries, decreased, the rate of decline being slightly smaller to the agreement group than to the nonagreement group. Taking an annual average for the past 2 years, however, exports to agreement countries have shown a much greater rate of increase over the preagreement period 1934-35 than average exports to the nonagreement group. The value of total imports into the United States during 1938 declined sharply from the relatively high level of the preceding declined sharply from the relatively high level of the preceding year, with a lesser rate of decline from the agreement group than from the nonagreement country group. During the 2-year period, 1937-38, the increase in imports from the agreement country group over the 2-year preagreement period was less than the average increase in exports to those countries.

RELATIVE CHANGE IN EXPORTS

While United States exports experienced a moderate decline in 1938 from the level of 1937, the exports from this country have shown smaller declines than those from most other countries. Exports from this country remained at high levels in 1938 because of the continued demand abroad for American aircraft, machinery, and metal manufactures, and because of the large surpluses of wheat, corn, fruit, tobacco, and other agricultural commodities, some of which were again available for export from this country. The demand for American machinery and metal manufactures has continued strong, due in a considerable measure to the heavy requirements of the rearmament programs of several European countries which have prevented those normally large exporting countries from supplying both export and domestic demands.

In 1938 there was a net decline of 6.8 percent compared to 1937 in the value of exports to the 17 agreement countries (not including the United Kingdom, with which an agreement became effective only on January 1, 1939), while the decline in exports to all other countries during the same period averaged 8.1 percent. In contrast to the general trend, exports to the Netherlands (including overseas territories), Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Honduras, Colombia, and Costa Rica, of the agreement group, were greater in 1938 than in 1937.

That exports to the nonagreement group as a whole during the same periods did not show a greater decline was due largely to the continued high level of exports to the United Kingdom and to increases in exports to Norway, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and some other countries. Exports to the United Kingdom accounted, roughly, for one-third of the exports to the nonagreement group. Although United States exports of cotton to the United Kingdom declined in 1938, total exports to that to the United Kingdom declined in 1938, total exports to that country were well maintained for the year because of increased shipments of petroleum products, wheat, tobacco, and other agricultural products. Exports as a whole to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics experienced a large gain in 1938 over the previous year, mainly because of the substantial gain in exports of machinery, particularly metal-working machinery.

The comparison of exports during the 2-year agreement period which closed on December 31, 1938, with the 2-year preagreement period of 1934-35, shows a definitely greater average rate of increase in exports from the United States to the group of agreement countries has to the proagreement countries as a whole.

crease in exports from the United States to the group of agreement countries than to the nonagreement countries as a whole. Exports to the agreement group in the 2-year period 1937-33 were greater in value by 61.2 percent than the average for the preagreement period 1934-35, while exports to all other countries increased by an average of only 37.9 percent in value.

During the past few years there have been several powerful forces other than trade agreements which have served to increase and then to maintain American foreign trade above the levels that previously prevailed. However, it seems significant that in com-previously prevailed. However, it seems significant that in comparison with the two preagreement years 1934–35, during the past 2 years our exports have experienced a much greater rate of increase to trade-agreement countries which have reduced or stabilized their tariffs or other trade barriers on distinctive American products than our exports to the nonagreement group.

RELATIVE CHANGE IN IMPORTS

As previously indicated, imports into the United States during 1938 experienced a marked decline in comparison with 1937. This 1938 experienced a marked decline in comparison with 1937. This decline in imports is generally attributed to the recession in business, and to the large domestic supply of agricultural products which, in contrast to the previous year, was more than ample for this country's needs. While most categories of imports declined in 1938, the decline was particularly severe in imports of certain raw materials, notably rubber, tin, wool, hides, and skins, and certain farm products, such as grain, fodder, and oil seeds. Beginning in the latter months of 1937, the demand for certain imported raw materials lessened considerably with the decline in industrial activity in this country and, in the case of some products, prices decreased markedly. Also, beginning in the latter months of 1937, the domestic supply of certain agricultural products became substantial enough to eliminate the necessity for large scale importations of these products. It so happens that imports of the raw materials and agricultural products in question had been obtainable mainly in nonagreement countries. Consequently the perable mainly in nonagreement countries. Consequently the percentage of decline in the value of imports in 1938 was greater for nonagreement countries as a whole than for the agreement group.

In 1938 there was a decline of 28.9 percent over 1937 in imports into the United States from the group of agreement countries, whereas imports during the same period of comparison from the nonagreement countries declined by 41.6 percent. In the broader comparison between the 2-year period 1937-38 and the preagreement period 1934-35, the increase in imports into the United States from agreement countries averaged 35.2 percent, while imports from the nonagreement group increased 37 percent. That imports from nonagreement countries during the 2-year period increased at a greater rate than imports from agreement countries, whereas a contrary tendency would normally have been expected, is due to a contrary tendency would normally have been expected, is due to the heavy imports of raw materials and agricultural products, mainly from nonagreement countries during 1937, to which attention has already been called. In 1938 this abnormal tendency was reversed and imports from agreement countries showed a smaller rate of decline in imports than from nonagreement countries.

COMPARATIVE CHANGES IN EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

United States exports during 1938 to the agreement countries as a whole decreased about $86,000,000 from the levels of 1937, while the year's decrease in imports into the United States from the same countries was about $362,000,000.

Taking a broader view, a comparison of the past 2 years with the preagreement years of 1934 and 1935 shows an increase in exports to the agreement countries group averaging about $465,000,000 annually, and an increase in imports from the same countries averaging approximately $280,000,000 annually.

PROGRESS OF PROGRAM—RECENT AGREEMENTS CONCLUDED—NEGOTIATIONS ANNOUNCED

With the conclusion of the trade agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom in November 1938, the reciprocal trade-agreements program assumed greater proportions as a trade-enlarging influence. At the same time a second agreement with Canada was signed, superseding the first agreement concluded at the end of 1935, and an agreement was concluded in the latter part of 1938 with Ecuador. The 19 countries with which reciprocal trade agreements are now in operation, together with their colonies account for approximately 60 percent of the total foreign trade of the United States.

The United States.

The trade agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom, which became effective January 1, 1939, covers not only the trade between these two countries, the largest trading countries in the world, but also the trade of the United States with Newfoundland and the nonself-governing British colonies. The importance of this agreement may be judged by the fact that the trade of the United States with the United Kingdom and the other areas accepted by the suggestions are traded. covered by the agreement constitutes nearly one-fifth of our trade with the world as a whole. The United Kingdom is generally the largest market for our exports and ranks among the three leading countries as a source of our imports. Our trade with some of the more than 50 British colonies to which the agreement relates is also large.

The second agreement with Canada, which became effective January 1, 1939, considerably enlarged the undertakings by each Government, since the experience of both countries under the first agreement had been considered to have been highly satisfactory. In recent years Canada has closely followed the United Kingdom at the best customer for our exports, taking about one-seventh of the total. Canada is much the largest source of imports into the total. Canada United States.

The agreement with Ecuador will enable the United States to retain its already favorable trade position in that country, as well as provide new opportunities for expansion.

During 1938 announcements were made of the intention to negotiate agreements with Turkey and Venezuela, and a limited supplemental agreement with Cuba.

¹ These figures include Surinam (Dutch Guiana), the trade with which is too small to warrant individual listing.

² United States statistics show only a small portion of the actual exports to Switzerland as most of the exports are transshipped through a third country and are shown as exports to the third country. Therefore too much significance should not be attached to the statistics of exports to Switzerland.

² These figures include all French colonies. Only France proper is listed separately.

⁴ Agreement became effective Apr. 16, 1938. The statistics of exports to Czechoslovakia are not representative of the actual trade as many shipments are declared as destined to third countries from which they are transshipped to Czechoslovakia. This was particularly true prior to 1938 during which year a larger share of exports to Czechoslovakia was consigned direct.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes after the expiration of the time which has already been allotted to him under previous order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with the other Members of the Congress to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] as he criticized the reciprocaltrade treaties. It is very difficult for the minority to make their voices heard on this particular issue. I venture to say that very little will be carried in the press in connection with the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] or any other Member of Congress who has spoken in criticism of the reciprocal-trade agreements. In today's paper you will find headlines regarding the statement that has been repeated at least 100 times by the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, and President Roosevelt in an attempt to make out to the public that the reciprocal-trade treaties are synonymous with peace. They have been deliberately sold to the American people on that basis, yet when members of the minority speak in opposition to them their voices are never heard or their views carried in the press.

After hearing the gentleman from Massachusetts criticize the trade treaties, I decided to add a few words to offset the peace propaganda deliberately injected in support of the trade agreements to deceive the American people.

First, with regard to the repeated propaganda emanating from the White House and the State Department to the American people, and particularly the women, that the trade treaties are synonymous with peace, I want to say as one who has served nearly 20 years on the Committee on Foreign Affairs that the reciprocal-trade agreements have no more to do with peace than cheese has to do with chalk. The Czechoslovakian agreement, which up to that time was the most important trade treaty we had entered into, did not save Czechoslovakia from being gobbled up by Germany; and that the British trade treaty, which today is the most important one, will be thrown overboard whenever it is in the interest of the British Empire, as it has nothing whatever to do with peace.

Now, my Republican friends, I want you to get these facts about the trade agreements, especially the new Members of the House: First, when they were presented to the Congress of the United States, we were assured, and the American people were assured, that after they had been in effect 6 months' time they would put 3,000,000 American wage earners back to work. It was also claimed that if we adopted these trade treaties the prices of agricultural products would go up, and it was stated that they were for the benefit of the farmers because the products of our farmers would be exported. None of these promises have been fulfilled; quite the contrary, instead of putting 3,000,000 people back to work, we now have 12,000,000 unemployed and millions more on part time. Instead of exporting more agricultural products, we have been exporting less and less each year, importing more and more, and the price of our farm commodities has been going down and down.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Rayburn], the majority leader, made one of the most fantastic statements a few minutes ago that has ever been made in the House of Representatives, and the statement should not go unanswered. He said, "The trouble is we Democrats have been unable to repeal the Republican tariff acts." This is not the first time the gentleman has said that according to friends of his in the State of Texas.

I happen to have made a speaking tour down in Texas in a symposium with Senator La Follette after the last election where I spoke three times. Whether this story is true I do not know, but after what the gentleman has said here in the House a few minutes ago I am quite confident it is true and accurate.

I was told that the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, in talking to his constituents—and I hope he will listen to what I am saying because I would not do him an injustice for anything in the world—at a little courthouse meeting, where all the farmers were gathered, said to them, "Now, if I am reelected and sent back to Washington and we have a big majority up there, I promise that we will, through legislation, increase the price of agricultural products, particularly of wheat, cotton, corn, and so on." Naturally, they were very delighted by this assurance. Two years later a meeting was held in the same courthouse and thousands of farmers came and packed the courthouse and gathered on the outside.

The majority leader was unable to say that his party had raised the price of agricultural products with respect to these three commodities, so he is reported to have said exactly what he said here a few minutes ago. He was reported to me as saying, "I made those promises to you and I made them to you in good faith, but those Republicans up in Congress, those Republicans in the House and in the Senate, blocked all our attempts to legislate benefits for agriculture in order to raise the prices of cotton and wheat and corn." He did not go on to say that in the last House we only had 88 Republicans and that in the Senate the Democrats were 4 or 5 to 1, the Republicans having only 16 Senators, but he said, "It was the Republicans that blocked all our attempts to modify the tariff and do away with the iniquitous Republican tariff."

Now, what happened under the Republican tariff right down in the gentleman's district and in the Southland, where all this support came for reciprocal-trade agreements and against these so-called iniquitous Republican tariffs of the past?

I am going to be very brief, because I have made this statement before, but it is one that cannot be denied. Under Republican administrations from 1920 to 1930 cotton in the Southland averaged 171/2 cents a pound. Today, under the reciprocal-trade treaties, it averages between 8 and 9 cents a pound. This is the difference, a 100-percent decrease under these trade treaties, and this is only part of the sad story, because we have lost one-half of our export trade in cotton alone. Under the Republican administrations it was between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 bales a year. Now it is around 4,000,000 bales a year and going down every year and practically every month, and yet we Republicans—just a handful in the last Congress—are blamed because the Democrats said they could not modify the tariff or do away with the tariff written by the Republicans, and the majority leader has repeated that same fantastic statement on the House floor here only 15 minutes ago.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Is it possible that the gentleman should have said that his own Democratic colleagues would not go on record in repealing the Tariff Act?

Mr. FISH. I know this only—that the Democrats control this House by a large majority, and the Senate likewise; and any time they want to repeal the tariff or any other law they can do it; and it is their duty to do it as they think it advisable, but they do not dare do it.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. That is the point of my question.

Mr. FISH. Let me proceed to discuss these trade treaties. We Republicans are at a great disadvantage because we are unable to reach the public.

The President gives out a statement each week that the whole peace policy of America is based on the trade agreements. The next week it is followed by a similar statement from the Secretary of State, the next week by some Democratic Senator, and the next week by Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, and then it starts all over again down the line from the President, the Secretary of State, a Democratic Senator, to Mr. Sayre, selling the trade agreements to the public on utterly fictitious and false premises. As Republicans we object to this vicious merry-go-round of propaganda. We object to the unconditional most-favored-nation clause, whereby if we enter into one treaty, and let us take for example the British treaty, we give the same concessions, the same advantages, and the same favors to all other nations. In other words, it brings the American wage earner who is paid $3 a day and upward into direct competition with the wage earner in Germany, Italy, and Czechoslovakia who is paid about $1 a day, and it brings the American wage earner into direct competition with the wage earner of Japan, who is paid 20 cents a day.

It must be self-evident, and will be self-evident, to the American people before we get through that our American labor cannot compete with 20-cent skilled labor in Japan, with modern factories, built for mass production; that our labor, if we continue on that basis, will continue to lose cut in our own American market; that there will be more and more unemployment; that factory wheels will cease to go round; and instead of there being 12,000,000 Americans unemployed, more millions will be added to that number each year. It must be self-evident, in spite of the propaganda of this administration and the State Department to build up these trade treaties on a fake peace issue that we cannot continue to compete with the skilled labor of Europe paid a dollar a day, or 20 cents a day in Japan, and that is exactly what the unconditional most-favored-nation clause does.

As long as that clause remains, it means only one thing and that is that the American wage earner will be crucified on a cross made by the sweatshop labor and the cheap labor of Europe and of Asia, and we Republicans owe a duty to our country to carry this message to the American wage earner, and if they ever find out the facts it will be the end of these trade treaties which are ruining our industries. They are also ruining the farm industry and losing our foreign markets as well as our own. In spite of the propaganda from the State Department, it is up to us to get these facts to the public, and if we ever get them to the public the wage earners will know where their own interest lies and will act accordingly.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman mentions 20 cents a day labor in Japan. The textile workers in Japan get paid as low as 15 cents a day for an 8½-hour day, and in 1932 Japan exported to this country about 1.000,000 yards of cotton cloth. I come from one of the largest cotton-manufacturing States in the Union. As against 1,000,000 yards imported in 1932 into this country, Japan imported in 1937 over 100,000,000 yards of cotton cloth into this country.

Mr. FISH. It must be self-evident to everybody that it is simply a matter of wage scales. If they have modern factories equal to ours, equipment equal to ours, and skilled labor, and they pay the skilled labor 15 to 20 cents or even 30 cents a day, and we pay our labor $3 a day and up, and they do not have adequate protection, it must be selfevident that the products of cheap Japanese labor will take away not only the world markets but our own markets as well. But getting back to the root of the whole thing, on our side the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway], who has been a member of the Ways and Means Committee for 20 years and more, can get up and orate at length in the House and not one word will appear in the newspapers, and every other member of the Committee on Ways and Means can get up and say the same thing and yet there will not be a single word in the newspapers about it. These trade treaties are being sold every day on a fictitious and an unfair basis, giving the wage earners the idea that they are identical with peace, and confusing the issue so that the American wage earner does not know the facts.

Whenever we get the opportunity it is our duty to present the facts and make this one of the main issues in the next Presidential campaign, and if it is made an issue in the campaign, so that it can be heard throughout the country, there will be an overwhelming demand to repeal the trade-treaty legislation and give back to Congress the right to write tariff legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EBERHARTER). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bender] is recognized for 3 minutes.

BRITISH RULE OF PALESTINE

Br. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the White Paper issued by the British Government last week is a blow to our modern civilization. It is a matter which concerns every man and woman who cherished a belief in the right of humanity. No one—of any race, color, or creed—who looks upon himself as a civilized human being can willingly remain silent while injustice is done to our fellow men. Great Britain by its action of the last week has informed the world that her promises are worth no more than those which have been denied by many another nation. By repudiating the Balfour declaration, the English Government confesses to the world its surrender to force and violence. The nobility and courage of almost half a million Jewish pioneers who have dedicated their lives, hopes, and their fortunes to the rebuilding of a barren land have been mocked, and, in their place, terrorism and anarchy have been rewarded.

The people of America have a right to be deeply concerned over these happenings. We have the duty to civilization to resist every step in human history which takes us backward toward barbarism and chaos. If the fruits of virtue and self-denial are to be dust and ashes, if bloodshed and rioting are to be crowned with success, there can be no order in our society.

The entire world was roused at the end of the World War when Turkish marauders killed innocent Christian Armenians. We were shocked. To me it does not matter who the victims are. I will not remain silent while men deny others the God-given right to live. In central Europe today there are more than 5,000,000 Jews. They have no place to turn. Germany destroys their bodies and souls. Other nations threaten them with mass starvation. The doors of every nation are closed to them. For these people, Palestine was the land of promise. For generations they have prayed for it, worked for it, and today, when it is almost a reality, Britain forgets its obligation.

We in the United States are parties to the agreement by which Britain rules Palestine. It is our duty to protest against any treatment which deprives people of their right to hope.

I call upon the Government of this Nation to demand that the White Paper be recalled and that the British Cabinet reinstate the Balfour declaration as Lord Balfour meant it. I demand that our administration remind London that there is a law higher than the laws of man; that the principles of every religious faith demand justice for the oppressed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, 1940

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 201) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 201

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 5269, a bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table to the end that all Senate amendments be, and the same are, disagreed to and a conference is requested with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and the Speaker shall immediately appoint conferees on the part of the House without intervening motion.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter from a friend and constituent of mine, Mr. H. T. McIntosh, in which he discusses in a very interesting and informative manner the work of the National Resources Committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

EXTENDING FACILITIES OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE TO ACTIVE OFFICERS OF FOREIGN SERVICE OF UNITED STATES

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3537) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman from New York would let that go over until tomorrow morning. It is rather unusual to have matters of that kind taken up after speeches have been made.

Mr. BLOOM. It is simply to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference. If the gentleman objects or would rather have it to go over, I do not object.

Mr. MAPES. I do not like to object, but I do not know what understanding the gentleman has had with the other Members.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin] had to leave, and he was promised there would be no business transacted after the Committee on Agriculture had concluded its business.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, with that understanding, I withdraw the request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing a speech made by me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Hare, for 4 days, on account of important business.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1939

(Legislative day of Friday, May 19, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father, who art our only source of light and life: We thank Thee this day not only for the dawn as it came fresh from Thy creative love but also for this hour of noontide, when, in the midst of life's feverish, anxious ways, we may find the rest that comes to those who through Thy life are led to the wells of peace.

If there be any of us who walk among the shadows, restore to us the sense of proportion, the salt of kindly reasonableness, the modesty and sympathetic geniality which are the very essence of Christian character, that we may rise from our lethargy to the splendor of the divine call and feel upon our faltering lips the touch of glowing embers from off Thine altar, enabling each one to say, "Tell me, O Thou whom my soul loveth, where Thou makest Thy flock to rest at noon." So lead us by the footsteps of the flock to the place of refreshment where we shall be re-created, where large horizons shall be opened up to eyes long weakened by the dust of life, and where we shall find our strength to be the might of God's almightiness. We ask it for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RISIS IN PALESTINE-EDITORIAL FROM THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations an editorial from the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press of May 19, 1939, entitled "Crisis in Palestine." is a condition of distress that is without parallel in the history of a people oppressed for ages long. Concern is expressed not only because of the fate of one race but also because of the international implications of this perplexing

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of May 19, 1939] CRISIS IN PALESTINE

Terror stalks through the streets once trodden by the leet of Christ. Riots, strikes, fasts, incendiarism, and sabotage have brought police and troops into action as the Jews of Palestine, foreseeing the end of their long-cherished dream of a homeland, display their anger against the British.

The Jews call this the blackest day in their modern history as protest meetings are held in more than 200 cities, towns, and villages. Only the Arabs are jubilant. The Jews see themselves forever doomed to live as a minority in an Arab-dominated state and charge the British with a betrayal "which condemns Jewish Palestine to the tragic fate of Czechoslovakia."

The situation created by the British White Paper "solution" of the Palestine problem would be serious even were Europe not on the brink of disaster. Britain now needs all the friends she can muster if she is to impress Germany and Italy sufficiently to avert war. It is particularly important to have peace and unity in the Arabian Peninsula—the vital land bridge connecting the Mediterranean and the Persian Guif.

Accustomed as we are to hearing the British extolled as the world's shrewdest and most far-seeing statesmen, let us have a look at what lies behind this situation. For surely there have been blunders.

been blunders.

During the World War, Britain as now, was desperately in need of all the help she could get and from every possible direction. The war was going badly for her not only in Europe but against the Turks in the Near East. So, to get the Arabs on her side, she promised them an independent Arabia. At the same time, to win over world Jewry, she offered a "national home for the Jewish people" in Palestine.

In so doing, of course, she was borrowing trouble. The two promises were bound to conflict. Aware of this, Britain's policy has wavered weakly for years as if living in hope that a miracle would happen.

would happen.

But it didn't. Royal commissions tried to find a solution and failed. Conferences got nowhere. Meanwhile relations between Arabs and Jews grew steadily worse and bloodshed more common. Each side blames the other. They would hardly be human if they didn't. Certainly the British have muddled inexcusably. If nowhere else they blundered in the beginning; and since, when they failed to state definitely just how far they were prepared to go, both with the Arabs and the Jews. The very haziness of the war-time Anglo-Arabian understanding left room for endless haggling, while the Balfour declaration with regard to the "national home" in Palestine was just as vague.

Britain's World War chickens seem to be coming home to roost.

And they are doing so at a particularly inopportune time. She has more than enough trouble without this.

But world Jewry also has its troubles in other quarters. Thus, whatever grievance it may have against Britain in Palestine, to attack her there would weaken her in her stand elsewhere—for instance, against the oppressors of Jewry in central Europe.

CITIZENSHIP INDUCTION CEREMONY IN WISCONSIN

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on Sunday last there was held at Manitowoc, Wis., a very thrilling ceremony. On that occasion the chief justice of the State, the president of the University of Wisconsin, and others participated in ceremonies inducting into citizenship all the youthful nativeborn new citizens who had attained the age of 21 years.

Prior to that time there had been educational classes conducted in citizenship in the community.

The idea was originally suggested by Prof. R. J. Colbert, of the University of Wisconsin. It attracted Nation-wide attention, both in the press and as a result of a radio broadcast of the ceremony.

I am advised that since this ceremony was held in Manitowoc County, 38 other counties in the State have requested the extension division of the university to assist them in arranging for similar programs in the coming year, and likewise there have been inquiries received by the extension division from many other counties scattered over the United States.

One of the prime movers in this ceremony was Judge Albert H. Schmidt, of Manitowoc County.

I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks there may be printed in the RECORD the address of Judge Schmidt, Chief Justice Rosenberry, President Dykstra, the message sent by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, and a letter which I received under date of May 20 from Prof. Richard C. Wilson, assistant director of the department of extension teaching in the University of Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Introductory Address by Judge Albert H. Schmidt, Manitowoc, Wis., Master of Ceremonies, Manitowoc County Citizenship Day Ceremonies, May 21, 1939

DAY CREMONIES, MAY 21, 1939

Members of the citizenship class of 1939, Dr. Colbert, Chief Justice Rosenberry, President Dykstra, distinguished guests, and fellow American citizens, we are met on this auspicious occasion, this Sabbath afternoon, to install, in the spirit of America, with appropriate, impressive, dramatic, colorful moving ceremony, the like of which America has never seen before, all young men and women of Manitowoc County, Wis., who have reached the age of 21 during the past current year, into the status of full-fledged American citizenship, the first plan and program of its kind in the United States. These young men and women and all of us who participate in these ceremonies are making history—important history. This is the birth of a new day in American democracy.

Here on these magnificent grounds—none more beautiful or suitable anywhere—at Manitowoc, meaning the "home of the great spirit," overlooking the majestic waters of Lake Michigan, in the very heart of the United States, in the midst of Dame Nature in all her glory, with every tree and every leaf and every blade of grass at attention, in the very spirit of our martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, whose name these grounds bear—what could be more magnificent, appropriate, and inspiring, as if foreordained for this very purpose?—we are inaugurating a movement representing the most essential contribution to our national life ever proposed, and the Nation's most essential educational need, which will contribute more to the security of our liberties than all the purely scientific foundations in the country, a movement already national in its scope and influence, whose far-reaching, beneficial effects scientific foundations in the country, a movement already national in its scope and influence, whose far-reaching, beneficial effects upon life and government will last long after we shall have gone to our reward.

The reconsecration of America in America is our greatest need-our task here today.

We are not here concerned with nationalities, sectarian or political beliefs. We are all Americans, of America—for America. The eyes of the entire country, of other countries, are upon us, upon Manitowoc, Wis. Thus while the attention, the honor is great, equally great is our responsibility. And we are ready here and now to meet that responsibility—as free, patriotic, loyal, liberty-loving Americans.

Fortunately for us, only in the United States of America could a program like this take place, for here the people are the Government and the Government is the people—here the men and women of the Nation are the kings and queens of the country, for under our Constitution the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people, and the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny nor Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny nor disparage others retained by the people.

We have planned with great care and detail, intending a national, democratic, permanent pattern, building not for a day or a year but for all time. Contemplate, if you please, some 2,500,000 21-year-old voters in the United States every year voluntarily being inducted into full-fledged American citizenship by a proper course of study as to the rights and responsibilities of citizenship, and formal, impressive, democratic, public installation ceremonies in the interests of a more alert and loyal Americanism, under the golden sun of liberty, and you have a picture of the importance, the immensity, and the far-reaching possibilities of the Manitowoc plan. Our aim and our hope is to make this the most impressive, the most dramatic, the most worth-while community undertaking in the history of Manitowoc County and the United States—a grand, graphic, tramatic, the most worth-wine community undertaking in the instruction of Manitowoc County and the United States—a grand, graphic, magnificent, inspiring spectacle of Americanism in action—not only to educate and inspire the young people of the country but the older citizens as well—a day when all Americans, irrespective of nationality, creed, or political belief, should reconsecrate themselves to a more vigilant, patriotic, and zealous interest in and devotion to the creek inspire the living life and liberty citizen revealed. to the great, inalienable, living, life, and liberty-giving principles of Americanism with which our Creator has endowed us—Americanism enlightening America, liberty enlightening the world—radiating cut from Manitowoc, Wis., on this May 21, 1939, to the four corners of the earth—the United States of America now and forever, one and inseparable—so that in truth and in fact government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the

Address by Hon. Marvin B. Rosenberry, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin

Mr. Chairman, members of the citizenship class of 1933, and fellow citizens, upon the invitation of the committee having charge of these exercises it becomes my privilege to administer to you the oath of allegiance. By reason of your being born in this country you are already under an obligation to support and maintain our constitutional system of government. The taking of the oath is merely a formal recognition on your part of this obligation. From the earliest times and in the most primitive societies those who were responsible for maintaining the Government were inducted into the body corporate of the tribe or the state with appropriate ceremonies. In many cases these ceremonies were participated in by the leading men of the community and were considered important. The object of the ceremony was to impress upon the initiate the seriousness of the step which he was about to take in assuming responsibility for the welfare of the group. The ceremony was responsibility for the welfare of the group. The ceremony was designed to acquaint the initiate with the character of the responsibilities which he assumed and the fundamental principles which underlay the government of which he was to become a part. These ceremonies were especially elaborate and impressive when an individual was to become an emperor or king. Two years ago we heard and read a great deal about the coronation of King George VI.

While the coronation ceremony is a survival of former times, as the King of England no longer exercises the sovereign power of the state, it is an example of the great importance attached by of the state, it is an example of the great importance attached by peoples to induction into office of a new sovereign. In this country the sovereign power is exercised by the people and not by a king, an emperor, or other potentate. The sovereign power in this country is not exercised by royal edict or imperial proclamation but by the people acting through their chosen representatives in accordance with the limitations of the Constitution and in the manner prescribed therein. At the next election you will by your ballot choose the individuals from the body politic who are to act for you in the exercise of so much of the sovereign or supreme power as the people have vested in their officers—legislative, executive, and judicial. If and when you are called upon to vote upon amendments to the Constitution, you will act in your capacity as sovereigns. The people of the state by a majority vote will themselves determine how much additional sovereign power shall be exercised by their representatives. It is the failure to distinguish between the exercise of sovereign power in the making of the Constitution and the exercise of the right to choose to distinguish between the exercise of sovereign power in the making of the Constitution and the exercise of the right to choose representatives to exercise governmental power under the Constitution that leads many persons to ignore one of the fundamentals of our Government. The chosen representatives of the people exercise only such power as has been committed to them by the Constitution. When the people adopt a constitution, they exercise a different kind of power—the sovereign or supreme power in the state. When they choose officers they name the persons who are to act as their agents or representatives under the constitution. To prepare you for the performance of these duties, you have been trained in the public schools and you have taken a course of instruction preparatory to this citizenship-day program. The instruction preparatory to this citizenship-day program. The principal purpose and object of your education at public expense—the whole purpose and object of the preparation for citizenship day—is to enable you to exercise this great power wisely and to prepare you to participate as citizens and, if chosen, as officers in the Government of the towns, villages, cities, counties, State, and the United States.

The oath which I shall administer to you is that prescribed by the constitution of the State and required to be administered to all public officers, adapted to use on this occasion. There has been added to it the words, "So help me God," which are not, in fact, a part of the oath but a prayer by which each one of you calls upon Divine Providence to aid and strengthen you in the discharge of the duties you this day solemnly promise to perform.

Our Constitution declares that "The blessings of a free government can only be maintained by a firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, frugality, and virtue, and by frequent recurrence to fundamental principles."

It is my hope and prayer that you may square your lives as citizens with this profound declaration of the people speaking through the Constitution and that the pledge to support constitutional government which you are about to take may be fulfilled in your lives as citizens of this great Republic.

FORM OF OATH The oath which I shall administer to you is that prescribed by

FORM OF OATH

I do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Wisconsin and the laws enacted pursuant thereto, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties and obligations of a citizen of the State of Wisconsin to the best of my ability, so help me God.

Address by Dr. C. A. Dykstra, President of the University of WISCONSIN

Our tribal ancestors recognized the transition from boyhood to manhood with solemn ceremonies. The dedication of young men to the service of the tribe and the assumption of responsibilities by individuals for the social group was the climax in the lives of the youth. Trials and tortures of many kinds preceded the initi-ation ceremony. During this period of preparation the young braves were made thoroughly familiar with tribal history, customs, and rituals.

The initiation rites were sacred undertakings of a deeply relifrom that moment on the initiate was presumed to be invested with a new purpose and a new strength. As an earnest of this new life the youth was given a new garment and a new name, as the tribe, amidst wild rejoicing, preclaimed him a man.

Vestiges of such ceremonies persist in most societies today, particularly in churches and fraterial organizations.

ticularly in churches and fraternal organizations. Young men-and in these days young women participate in them—make their pledges and take their vows. In our democratic society which threw overboard all ritual, we have done nothing to impress upon our young people that at 21 they become responsible voting members of the body politic. This ceremony at Manitowoc today is an attempt to repair this long omission. Here is youth 700 strong about to assume the burden of adulthood in a free society.

You have experienced a period of training for this new enterprise. You have caught a new enthusiasm for democratic processes and possibilities. You know something of your obligations as citizens. You are organized as a convention of young voters.

As you look about, as you read your papers, you realize that our governments in many places have become corrupted and are no longer representative of the whole citizenship. Small groups of partisans and sometimes one person use the political device which partisans and sometimes one person use the political device which we call government for exploitation and even for personal gain. Such a course is not wholesome, nor is it wise for a democracy to allow the perversion of its own processes or aims.

The aims of a democratic society lead to the good life for all through the participation of all according to their talents and their merits. They proceed upon the theory that if opportunity is afforded and guaranteed to all, the general good will be approximated.

In accordance with this principle we have provided universal public education so that each individual may make the most of his talents. But to make the most of one's talents does not carry with it the license to exploit others or to trample upon the rights of our fellow men. It carries with it rather the deep obligation to see to it that all are fairly dealt with and that all are allowed to live their lives as individuals and as men.

to live their lives as individuals and as men.

Deeply imbedded in our legal and social history are the general doctrines of the rights of men. It is the manifest duty of Americans to protect these individual rights as the occasion demands. We must defend to the uttermost our ancient freedoms—free speech and assembly and the right to worship as we will. We must defend life and liberty and what Jefferson called the pursuit of happiness. In modern terms this last phrase means the right to make a living through access to opportunity to work and care for a family. This is a difficult thing to do in the modern world. But it is incumbent upon us to work at it—to bring it to pass. The validity and the perpetuation of the democratic way of life are bound up in a solution of this problem.

Certain challenges face you—who today assume the obligations

Certain challenges face you-who today assume the obligations of citizenship.

First. You must see to it that you have the personal integrity which is expected of the intelligent adult.

Second. You must exercise that integrity and your best judgment besides in the interest of the community in which you live.

Third. You must be loyal to the commitments made to the democratic way by our forefathers.

Fourth. You must be diligent and honorable in exercising the voting trust with which you are now invested.

Fifth. You must realize that patriotism is a quality or attribute which requires daily cultivation and daily service. It is not a cloak to be worn for occasions and cast aside for individual gain or glory.

to be worn for occasions and cast aside for individual gain or glory. It is not a refuge for weak souls but a badge of opportunity. Today the democratic way is challenged the world over. Millions—hundreds of millions—have turned their backs upon it. They are persuaded that it is easier to cast their burdens upon someone who will carry the load and give the orders. They have sacrificed their freedoms by so doing. You are a portion of the youth of America who eventually will decide the question as to whether our complex problems can be solved by a democratic process which preserves our freedoms. Democracy is the hard way—the difficult road. the difficult road

Today I commend to you the hard road. Your fathers have traveled it for centuries. Continue upon it and keep it open. Millions still to be born have the right to be born free—you cannot sell their birthright for a mess of pottage.

Today set out with courage and stout hearts. Sing your marching songs. Hold high the banner. Let freedom ring! Yes; let it ring-but also let freedom live and work.

> FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., May 12, 1939.

Hon. Albert H. Schmidt, 927 South Eighth Street, Manitowoc, Wis.

My Dear Judge: With further reference to my wire of May 10, 1939, and in accordance with the request contained in your letter of May 4, 1939, I am happy indeed to enclose a statement pertaining to the Manitowoc Citizenship Day, which I trust will be of some assistance to you.

assistance to you.

I regret so much that a previous commitment in Nashville, Tenn., as I wired you, prevents my accepting the kind invitation to be in Manitowoc on May 21.

With best wishes and kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

J. EDGAR HOOVER.

THE TRUE CITIZEN

Manitowoc's Citizenship Day is indeed commendable and worth while. Designed to protect the ideals of Americanism, it should truly have the wholehearted support and approbation of every citizen. If our democratic institutions are to survive, we must, of necessity, protect them against "isms" and the subversive forces of lawlessness. In the final analysis the basic functions of governlawlessness. In the final analysis the basic functions of government center around the principles of maintaining law and order—and lawlessness is the greatest threat to American civil liberties today. It undermines the fundamental concept of our democracy, of insuring to all peoples life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Lawlessness not only threatens national security but in doing so threatens our basic social unit, the home. The task confronting every American citizen today is to insure that law and order shall reign supreme.

A true citizen respects and loves the traditions laws and cus-and order shall reign supreme.

A true citizen respects and loves the traditions, laws, and customs of our country. Young men and women who reach the age of 21 view a world with many perplexing problems. They find the public often apathetic toward lawlessness, graft, and corruption. They find that members of their own age group—21—were the most frequently arrested in 1938. This problem of crime can only be definitely solved with the development of law-abiding citizens. It is a tremendous task, but is one of importance and cannot be minimized. Law enforcement cannot fight this battle alone. True citizenship is the answer.

The day set apart in Manitowoc to focus attention on citizenship will prove a powerful sustaining force. Not only will it serve

The day set apart in Manitowoc to focus attention on citizenship will prove a powerful sustaining force. Not only will it serve to educate the youthful citizens as to their civic responsibility but will serve to reawaken the sense of public responsibility in general, to instill a constant vigil upon the part of every good citizen, and to reestablish a solid foundation of majesty of law. Without the wholesome support of the people, the efforts of law-enforcement officials must go for naught. After all, it is the will of the people which determines what sort of conditions shall continue to exist. Any citizen who yearns for good government will, if active in civic affairs, cause an improvement in conditions, ameliorating the crime burden. In the first place, he should give to the laws of the city, county, State, and Nation a scrupulous and conscientious personal obedience. He should take an active part in the administration of justice and become familiar with the workings of the courts and their jurisdiction. Of most importance, part in the administration of justice and become familiar with the workings of the courts and their jurisdiction. Of most importance, he should refuse to tolerate venal political interference with law-enforcement agencies and officials in the discharge of their duties. In the event the ugly head of corruption intrudes itself into the law-enforcement picture, he should, by all means, denounce it. Finally, he should, as a public-spirited citizen, set a needed example for his elder brethren, consider it an honor and privilege to sixt upon a turn. sit upon a jury.

> THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN, University Extension Division, Madison, May 20, 1939.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C. DEAR SENATOR LA FOLLETTE: Wisconsin leads again!

America's first program of citizenship training for native-born new voters is being climaxed on May 21 with Citizenship Day—the occasion upon which all the 21-year-old new voters in Manitowoc County will be inducted into the electorate with appropriate ceremony. Chief Justice Rosenberry, President Dykstra, State Vocational Director Hambrecht, and others will take part

State Vocational Director Hambrecht, and others will take part in the impressive ceremony.

The Wisconsin plan for training new voters in citizenship includes a careful enumeration of the 21-year-olds in each community, their organization into classes for instruction, and their induction into the electorate. The educational program stresses the organization and function of the county unit of government—the town, village, city, and county—in which the voter has his closest contacts with government. Preparing this instructional material, organizing and conducting the classes, and setting up and carrying out the induction ceremony involve considerable effort and time. Arrangements must be made for their financing. This plan was conceived by Prof. R. J. Colbert, of the University of Wisconsin Extension Division, and carried out for the first time in Manitowoc County. As a result of the success of the program in that county, citizens of 38 other Wisconsin counties have asked the extension division to assist them in conducting similar programs for their new voters next year.

People in all parts of our Nation have received the plan with People in all parts of our Nation have received the plan with open arms. Newspapers and magazines from coast to coast have carried feature stories. Hundreds of newspapers printed editorials urging the adoption of the plan on a Nation-wide basis. Interested citizens in every State of the Union have written to the extension division asking for information about the program. Many have asked how it can be adapted to their communities. The plan is being snapped up in many parts of the country. It is growing, expanding.

is growing, expanding.

Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, and Representative Jennings Randolff, of West Virginia, showed great foresight when they introduced their bill which proposes Federal aid for States conducting programs of citizenship training. Such legislation will make it possible for the citizens of the United States to help their new voters better to understand governmental organization and operation and their relationship to it. The passage of the bill will help generate a more intelligent and creative participating citizenry. It will help make America a better place in which to live.

Wisconsin has laid the ground work for citizenship training programs. Congress has the opportunity to build a mighty structure upon this foundation.

Sincerely yours,

RICHARD C. WILSON, Assistant Editor.

DECISION OF SUPREME COURT IN O'MALLEY v. WOODROUGH

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States vesterday in the case of O'Malley against Woodrough, which definitely ends the immunity which by court decision heretofore made, particularly the case of Evans against Gore, was attached to the salaries of all Federal

Mr. Justice Frankfurter said, in speaking of Evans against

The decision met wide and steadily growing disfavor from legal scholarship and professional opinion.

It is now, in my judgment, definitely overruled.

The case was decided by a 7-to-1 vote, with one of the Justices not participating. I mention it now because the decision squarely upholds the position taken by those of us who advocated the public salary tax bill which the Congress enacted about a month ago. It will be recalled that the Senate adopted my amendment applying the tax to all Federal judges.

I ask that both the majority and the minority opinions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the opinions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 810. October term, 1938. George W. O'Malley, Individually and as Collector of Internal Revenue, appellant, v. Joseph W. Woodrough and Ella B. Woodrough. On appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska. May 22, 1939]

Mr. Justice Frankfurter delivered the opinion of the Court.

The case is here under section 2 of the act of August 24, 1937 (50 Stat. 751), as a direct appeal from a judgment of a district court whose "decision was against the constitutionality" of an act of Congress. The suit below, an action at law to recover a tax on income claimed to have been illegally exacted, was disposed of upon the pleadings and turned on the single question now before us, to wit: Is the provision of section 22 of the Revenue Act of 1932 (47 Stat. 169, 178), reenacted by section 22 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1648, 1657), constitutional insofar as it included in the "gross income," on the basis of which taxes were to be paid, the compensation of "judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932."

That this is the sole issue will emerge from a simple statement of the facts and of the governing legislation. Joseph W. Woodrough was appointed a United States circuit judge on April 12, 1933, and qualified as such on May 1, 1933. For the calendar year of 1936 a joint income-tax return of Judge Woodrough and his wife disclosed his judicial salary of $12,500, but claimed it to be constitutionally immune from taxation. Since it was not included in "gross income," no tax was payable. Subsequently a deficiency of $631.60 was assessed on the basis of that item, which, with interest, was paid under protest. Claim for refund having been rejected, the present suit was brought, and judgment went against the collector. The assessment of the present tax was technically under the act of 1936, but that act merely carried forward the provisions of the act of 1932, for the inclusion of compensation of "judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932," which had been similarly incorporated in the Revenue Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 680, 686-687). Therefore the power of Congress to include Judge Woodrough's salary as a circuit judge in his "gross income" must be judged on the basis of the validity of section 22 of the Revenue Act of 1932 and not as though that power had been originally asserted by the Revenue Act of 1936. For it was the act of June 6, 1932, that gave notice to all judges thereafter to be appointed, of the new congressional policy to include the judicial salaries of such judges in the assessment of income taxes. The fact that Judge Woodrough, before he became a circuit judge, and prior to June 6, 1932, had been a district judge is wholly irrelevant to the matter in issue. The two offices have different statutory origins, are filled by separate nominations and confirmations, and enjoy different emolu-That this is the sole issue will emerge from a simple statement of issue. The two offices have different statutory origins, are filled by separate nominations and confirmations, and enjoy different emoluments. A new appointee to a circuit court of appeals occupies a new office no less when he is taken from the district bench than when he is drawn from the bar.

By means of section 22 of the Revenue Act of 1932, Congress sought to avoid, at least in part, the consequences of Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245). That case, decided on June 1, 1920, ruled for the first time that a provision requiring the compensation received by the judges of the United States to be included in the "gross income" from which the net income is to be computed, although merely part of a taxing measure of general, nondiscriminatory application to all earners of incomes, is contrary to article III, section 1, of the Constitution which provides that the "compensation" of the "judges" "shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." (See also the separate opinion of Mr. Justice Field in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 586, 604 et seq.) To be sure, in a letter to Secretary Chase, Chief Justice Taney expressed similar views. In doing so, he merely gave his extrajudicial opinion, asserting at the same time that the question could not be adjudicated. Chief Justice Taney's vigorous views were shared by Attorney General Hoar. Thereafter both the Treasury Department and Congress acted upon this construction of the Constitution. However, the meaning which Evans v. Gore imputed to the history which explains article III, section 1, was contrary to the way in which it was read by other English speaking courts. The decision met wide and steadily growing disfavor from legal scholarship and professional opinion. Evans v. Gore itself was rejected by most of the courts before whom the matter came after that decision.

Having regard to these circumstances, the question immediately before us is whether Congress exceeded its constitutional power in providing that United States judges appointed after the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not enjoy immunity from the incidences of taxation to which everyone else within the defined classes of income is subjected. Thereby, of course, Congress has committed itself to the position that a nondiscriminatory tax laid generally on net income is not, when applied to the income of a Federal judge, a diminution of his salary within the prohibition of article III, section 1 of the Constitution. To suggest that it makes inroads upon the independence of judges who took office after Congress had thus charged them with the common duties of citizenship, by making them bear their aliquot share of the cost of maintaining the Government, is to trivialize the great historic experience on which the framers based the safeguards of article III, section 1.9 To subject them to a general tax is merely to recognize that judges are also citizens, and that their particular function in government does not generate an immunity from sharing with their fellow citizens the material burden of the Government whose Constitution and laws they are charged with administering.

Supreme Court of the United States. No. 810. October term, 1938. George W. O'Malley, Individually and as Collector of Internal Revenue, appellant, v. Joseph W. Woodrough and Ella B. Woodrough. On appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska. [May 22, 1939.]

Woodrough. On appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska. [May 22, 1939.]

Mr. Justice Butler, dissenting.

Concretely, the question is whether, by exacting from United States Circuit Judge Joseph W. Woodrough and his wife $631.60 in the form of income tax on his salary of $12,500 for 1936, the Government diminished the compensation for his services theretofore fixed by Congress. That item excluded, they had no taxable income. The judge's monthly pay was $1,041.66. The tax took at the monthly rate of $52.63.

The material details may be given briefly.

April 12, 1933, Judge Woodrough was appointed judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. He qualified May 1, 1933. Congress had by the act of December 13, 1926,¹ enacted that "To each of the circuit judges the sum of $12,500 per year" shall be paid as compensation. Since May 1, 1933, appellee has received the specified pay. The Revenue Act of June 6, 1932, applicable only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1931, contained a provision declaring that in the case of judges taking office after that date "the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all acts fixing the compensation of such * * * judges are hereby amended accordingly." The Revenue Act of 1934, applicable only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1933, and that of 1936, applicable only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1933, contain the same language as that just quoted from the act of 1932.

Judge Woodrough and his wife made a joint income tax return

Judge Woodrough and his wife made a joint income tax return for 1936; it disclosed his salary but claimed it was not subject to the tax. The commissioner held the item taxable and made a deficiency assessment of $631.60. Plaintiffs paid under protest and filed claim for refund; it was denied. Claiming the tax that they were so compelled to pay diminished the judge's compensation and that therefore section 22 (a) of the act of 1936 violates section 1, article III, of the Constitution, plaintiffs sued to recover the amount of the tax. The collector moved to dismiss. The court held the act unconstitutional, overruled the motion and, defendant having elected not to plead further, gave plaintiffs judgment as prayed. Defendant appealed.⁵

Article III, section 1, declares: "The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in

It safeguards the independence of the judiciary. The abuse against which it was intended to be a barrier is included in the list of reasons for our Declaration of Independence. of section 1 of article III, said:

"The Executive not only dispenses the honors, but holds the sword of the community. The legislature not only commands the purse, but prescribes the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated. The judiciary, on the contrary, has no influence over either the sword or the purse; no direction either of the strength or of the wealth of the society; and can take no active resolution whatever. It may truly be said to have neither force nor will, but merely judgment * * *.

"This simple view of the matter * * proves incontestably that the judiciary is beyond comparison the weakest of the three departments of power; that it can never attack with success either of the other two; and that all possible care is requisite to enable it to defend itself against their attacks. * * *

"The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited constitution. By a limited constitution, I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such, for instance, as that it shall pass no bills of attainder, no ex post facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be preserved in practice no other way than through the medium of courts of justice, whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the Constitution void. Without this, all the reservations of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing * * *." (The Federalist, No. 78.)

"Next to permanency in office, nothing can contribute more to the independence of the judges than a fixed provision for their sup-port. * * * In the general course of human nature, a power have declared that permanent salaries should be established for the judges, but the experiment has in some instances shown that such expressions are not sufficiently definite to preclude legislative evasions. Something still more positive and unequivocal has been evinced to be requisite. * * * This provision for the support of the judges bears every mark of prudence and efficacy; and it may be safely affirmed that, together with the permanent tenure of their offices, it affords a better prospect of their independence than is discoverable in the constitutions of any of the States in regard to their own judges." (The Federalist, No. 79.)

Mr. Justice Story declared that "Without this provision, the other, as to the tenure of office, would have been utterly nugatory, and indeed a mere mockery. * * * " (2 Story, sec. 1628.)

Chancelor Kent said: "The provision for the permanent support of the judges is well calculated, in addition to the tenure of their office, to give them the requisite independence. It tends, also, to secure a succession of learned men on the bench, who, in consequence of a certain undiminished support, are enabled and induced to quit the lucrative pursuits of private business for the duties of that important station. The Constitution of the United States, on this subject, was an improvement upon all our previously existing constitutions" (1 Kent Com. 294).

The first judicial construction of the clause was by the circuit court of the District of Columbia in 1803 in the case of United States v. More.* The court was composed of Chief Justice Marshall, Chief Judge Kilty, and Circuit Judge Cranch. The opinion was written by Judge Cranch. The court sustained a demurrer to an indictment charging that More, a justice of the peace, under color of his office, exacted an illegal fee, 12 cents, for giving judgment upon a warrant for a small debt. The issue was whether an act of Congress abolishing fees of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia could affect those who accepted their commissions wh compensation for their services, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. The act of Congress of February 27, 1801, which constitutes the office of justices of the peace * * * ascertains the compensation which they shall have for their services in holding their courts. * * * This compensation is given in the form of fees, payable when the services are rendered. * * * That his—the justice's—compensation shall not be diminished during his continuance in office seems to follow as a necessary consequence from the provisions of the Constitution. * * * If his compensation has once been fixed by law, a subsequent law for diminishing that compensation (a fortiori for abolishing it) cannot affect that justice of the peace during his continuance in office * * *."

The first attempt to tax compensation of Federal judges was during the Civil War. Section 86 of the act of July 1, 1862, levied "on all salaries of officers, or payments to persons in the * * service of the United States * * * when exceeding the rate of $600 per annum, a duty of 3 percent on the excess above the said service of the United States * * * when exceeding the rate of $600 per annum, a duty of 3 percent on the excess above the said $600," and directed disbursing officers to deduct and withhold the duty. These general provisions were construed by the revenue officers to comprehend the compensation of the President and the judges of the United States. By letter of February 16, 1863, Mr. Chief Justice Taney protested to the Secretary of the Treasury. In the course of his letter, he said:

the course of his letter, he said:

"The act in question, as you interpret it, diminishes the compensation of every judge 3 percent, and if it can be diminished to that extent by the name of a tax, it may in the same way be reduced from time to time at the pleasure of the legislature.

"The judiciary is one of the three great departments of the Government, created and established by the Constitution. Its duties and powers are specifically set forth, and are of a character that requires it to be perfectly independent of the two other departments, and in order to place it beyond the reach and above even the suspicion of any such influence, the power to reduce their compensation is expressly withheld from Congress, and excepted from their powers of legislation.

"Language could not be more plain than that used in the Constitution. It is moreover one of its most important and essential provisions. For the articles which limit the powers of the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and those which provide safeguards for the protection of the citizen in his person assigned to it." The letter of the Chief Justice was not answered and, at his request, the Court, May 10, 1863, ordered the letter entered on its records. In 1869 the Secretary of the Treasury requested the opinion of Attorney General Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar as to the conopinion of Attorney General Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar as to the constitutionality of the act construed to extend to judges' salaries. He rendered an opinion in substantial accord with the views expressed in Chief Justice Taney's protest (13 Op. A. G. 161). Accordingly, the tax on the compensation of the President and of judges was discontinued and the amounts theretofore collected from them were refunded—some through administrative channels; others through action of the Court of Claims and ensuing appropriations by Congress. See Wayne v. United States (26 C. Cis. 274, 200. 27, 2424, 206).

In 1889 Mr. Justice Miller, a member of the Court since 1862.

"The Constitution of the United States has placed several limitations upon the general power [of taxation], and * * * some of them are implied. One of its provisions is that neither the President of the United States (art. II, sec. 1, par. 6), nor a judge of the Supreme or inferior courts (art. III, sec. 1) shall have his salary diminished during the period for which he shall have been closted or during his continuous in office. It is very clear that elected, or during his continuance in office. It is very clear that when Congress, during the late [Civil] war, levied, an income tax and placed it as well upon the salaries of the President and the judges of the courts as those of other people, that it was a diminution of them to just that extent."

Although the Income Tax Act of 1894 said nothing about the compensation of the judges, Mr. Justice Field construed section 33 10 to tax that compensation and assigned that ground among others for joining in the decision that the act was unconstitutional (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 604–606). Mr. Justice Field, who was confirmed the day this Court ordered Chief Justice Taney's letter entered on its records, had taken his place upon this bench at the beginning of the following ordered Chief Justice Taney's letter entered on its records, had taken his place upon this bench at the beginning of the following term. His opinion recited the facts of that incident and quoted extensively from the letter, which was printed as an appendix to the volume of the reports containing the opinions in the Pollock case (157 U. S. 701). The Justice ended his discussion of the matter by stating his belief, based on information, that the opinion of Attorney General Hoar had been followed ever since without question by the Treasury. And, upon reargument of the cause, Attorney General Oney said in his brief: "There has never been a doubt since the opinion of Attorney General Hoar that the salaries of the President and judges were exempt."

The Revenue Acts of 1913 11 and 1916, 12 being the first two after adoption of the sixteenth amendment, expressly excluded from gross income the compensation of judges then in office. But after this country engaged in the World War the Revenue Act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, defined gross income to include "in the case of the President * * * [and] the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts * * the compensation received as such." 12 The reports of the congressional committees having the measure in charge indicate that the Congress was in doubt as to the constitutional validity of that provision and intended to have the question decided by the courts. 14 The question was raised and presented for decision in Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245). The collector included the salary for 1918 of Judge Evans, appointed before enactment of the taxing statute, in gross income. Had it been excluded he would have had no taxable income. He paid the tax enactment of the taxing statute, in gross income. Had it been excluded he would have had no taxable income. He paid the tax and brought suit to recover the amount so exacted. The United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky held him not entitled to recover. But after argument by eminent counsel, including the Solicitor General, this court held that the clause declaring that compensation of judges "shall not be diminished during their continuance in office" prevents diminution by taxation and that it has been so construed in the actual practice of the

For the purpose of disclosing the reasons for and true meaning of the clause forbidding diminution of compensation of judges, the opinion of the Court, written by Mr. Justice Van Devanter, brought forward statements of Alexander Hamilton, Chief Justice Marshall, Justice Story, Chancelor Kent, Chief Justice Taney, Justice Field, Attorneys General Hoar and Olney, and others.

Miller on the Constitution of the United States, p. 247.

Speaking for the Court, he said:

"With what purpose does the Constitution provide that the compensation of judges 'shall not be diminished during their continuance in office'? Is it primarily to benefit the judges or, rather, to promote the public weal by giving them that independence which makes for an impartial and courageous discharge of the judicial function? Does the provision merely forbid direct diminution, such makes for an impartial and courageous discharge of the judicial function? Does the provision merely forbid direct diminution, such as expressly reducing the compensation from a greater to a less sum per year, and thereby leave the way open for indirect, yet effective, diminution, such as withholding or calling back a part as a tax on the whole? Or does it mean that the judge shall have a sure and continuing right to the compensation whereon he confidently may rely for his support during his continuance in office so that he need have no apprehension lest his situation in this regard may be changed to his disadvantage?"

"* The primary purpose of the prohibition against "* * * The primary purpose of the prohibition against diminution was not to benefit the judges, but, like the clause in respect of tenure, to attract good and competent men to the bench respect of tenure, to attract good and competent men to the bench and to promote that independence of action and judgment which is essential to the maintenance of the guaranties, limitations, and pervading principles of the Constitution and to the administration of justice without respect to persons and with equal concern for the poor and the rich. Such being its purpose, it is to be construed, not as a private grant, but as a limitation imposed in the public interest; in other words, not restrictively, but in accord with its spirit and the principle on which it proceeds.

"Obviously diminuition may be effected in more ways than one "Obviously, diminuition may be effected in more ways than one. Some may be direct and others indirect or even evasive, as Mr. Hamilton suggested. But all which by their necessary operation and effect withhold or take from the judge a part of that which has been promised by law for his services must be regarded as has been promised by law for his services must be regarded as within the prohibition. Nothing short of this will give full effect to its spirit and principle. Here the plaintiff was paid the full compensation, but was subjected to an involuntary obligation to pay back a part, and the obligation was promptly enforced. Of what avail to him was the part which was paid with one hand and then taken back with the other? Was he not placed in practically the same situation as if it had been withheld in the first instance? Only by subordinating substance to mere form could it be held that his compensation was not diminished. his compensation was not diminished.

"The prohibition is general, contains no excepting words, and appears to be directed against all diminution, whether for one purpose or another; and the reasons for its adoption, as publicly assigned at the time and commonly accepted ever since, make with impelling force for the conclusion that the fathers of the Constitution intended to prohibit diminution by taxation as well as otherwise—that they regarded the independence of the judges as of far greater importance than any results that could come from taxing greater importance than any revenue that could come from taxing their salaries.

greater importance than any revenue that could come from taxing their salaries. * * * "When we consider * * * what is comprehended in the congressional power to tax—where its exertion is not directly or impliedly interdicted—it becomes additionally manifest that the prohibition now under discussion was intended to embrace and prevent diminution through the exertion of that power; for, as this court repeatedly has held, the power to tax carries with it 'the power to embarrass and destroy'; may be applied to every object within its range 'in such measure as Congress may determine'; enables that body 'to select one calling and omit another, to tax one class of property and to forebear to tax another'; and may be applied in different ways to different objects, so long as there is 'geographical uniformity' in the duties, imposts, and excises imposed [citing]. Is it not therefore morally certain that the discerning statesmen who framed the Constitution and were so sedulously bent on securing the independence of the judiciary intended to protect the compensation of the judges from assault and diminution in the name or form of a tax? Could not the purpose of the prohibition be wholly thwarted if this avenue of attack were left open? Certainly there is nothing in the words of the prohibition indicating that it is directed against one legislative power and not another; and in our opinion due regard for its spirit and principle requires that it be taken as directed against them all."

Mr. Justice Holmes wrote a dissenting onling in which Mr.

or another, and in our opinion due regard for its spirit and principle requires that it be taken as directed against them all."

Mr. Justice Holmes wrote a dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Justice Brandeis joined. With that expression, his opposition to the decision ended. Two years later, in Gillespie v. Oklahoma (257 U. S. 501), writing for the Court, invalidating a State tax upon net U. S. 501), writing for the Court, invalidating a State tax upon net income of a lessee from sales of his share of oil and gas received under leases of restricted Indian land, he said (p. 505): "In cases where the principal is absolutely immune from interference an inquiry is allowed into the sources from which net income is derived, and if a part of it comes from such a source the tax is pro tanto void; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429); a rule lately illustrated by Evans v. Gore * * *." And in that case he relied on the truth, as put by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 431), that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." He quoted (p. 505) with approval from Indian Oil Co. v. Oklahoma (240 U. S. 522) the statement of the opinion (p. 530) that "a tax upon the leases is a tax upon the power to make them, and could be used to destroy the power to make them." 15 make them." 15

¹⁵ Gillespie v. Oklahoma is one of the decisions subjected to condemnatory comment in the concurring opinion in Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe, No. 478, October term, 1938. It is there said: "A succession of decisions (Gillespie v. Oklahoma is the first cited) thereby withdrew from the taxing power of the States and Nation Miles v. Graham (1925) (268 U. S. 501) held invalid section 213 (a), Revenue Act of 1918 (condemned in Evans v. Gore), when applied to compensation of Judge Graham, appointed after its enactment. Mr. Justice Holmes joined in the decision. Mr. Justice Brandels merely noted dissent.

In the course of the opinion we said:

"Does the circumstance that defendant in error's appointment came after the taxing act require a different view concerning his right to exemption? The answer depends upon the import of the word 'compensation' in the constitutional provision.

"The words and history of the clause indicate that the purpose was to impose upon Congress the duty definitely to declare what sum shall be received by each judge out of the public funds and the times for payment. When this duty has been complied with, the amount specified becomes the compensation which is protected against diminution during his continuance in office.

"* * The compensation fixed by law when defendant in error assumed his official duties was $7,500 per annum, and to exact a tax in respect of this would diminish it within the plain rule of Evans v. Gore.

"The taxing act became a law [February 24, 1919] prior to the statute prescribing salaries for judges of the Court of Claims [approved February 25, 1919]; but if the dates were reversed, it would be impossible to construe the former as an amendment be impossible to construe the former as an amendment which reduced salaries by the amount of the tax imposed. No judge is required to pay a definite percentage of his salary, but all are commanded to return, as a part of 'gross income,' 'the compensation received as such' from the United States. From the 'gross income' various deductions and credits are allowed, as for interest paid, contributions or gifts made, personal exemptions varying with family relations, etc., and upon the net result assessment is made. family relations, etc., and upon the net result assessment is made. The plain purpose was to require all judges to return their compensation as an item of 'gross income' and to tax this as other salaries. This is forbidden by the Constitution.

"The power of Congress definitely to fix the compensation to be received at stated intervals by judges thereafter appointed is clear. It is equally clear, we think, that there is no power to tax a judge of a court of the United States on account of the salary prescribed for blim by lew."

for him by law."

for him by law."

In O'Donoghue v. United States (1933) (289 U. S. 516) we construed the act of June 30, 1932, seeducing the salaries of all judges "except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office." We there held that the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia were constitutional courts, and therefore that the judges of those courts were excepted from the salary reduction. We cited the authorities, adopted the reasoning, and reaffirmed the conclusions on which rest the Court's judgment in Evans v. Gore and Miles v. Graham. And see Booth v. United States (291 U. S. 339).

Evidently the Court intends to destroy the decision in Evans v. Gore. Without suggesting that there is any distinction between that case and Miles v. Graham, it declares that the latter "cannot survive." But the decision of today falls to deal with, much not survive." But the decision of today fails to deal with, much less to detract from the reasoning of those cases. The opinion would imply that the letter of Chief Justice Taney to the Secretary of the Treasury and the separate opinion of Mr. Justice Field in the Pollock case were treated as having weight as judicial a very considerable range of wealth without regard to the actual workings of our federalism, and this, too, when the financial needs of all governments began steadily to mount."

At another place in that concurrence the writer stated: "The volume of the Court's business has long since made impossible the early healthy practice whereby the Justices gave expression to individual opinions. But the old tradition still has relevance when an vidual opinions. But the old tradition still has relevance when an important shift in constitutional doctrine is announced after a reconstruction in the membership of the Court. * * * The arguments upon which McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316) rested * * have been distorted by sterile refinements unrelated to affairs. These refinements derived authority from an unfortunate remark in the opinion in McCulloch v. Maryland. Partly as a flourish of rhetoric and partly because the intellectual fashion of the times indulged a free use of absolutes, Chief Justice Marshall gave currency to the phrase that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." * * * The web of unreality spun from Marshall's famous dictum was brushed away by one stroke of Mr. Justice Holmes' pen: "The power to tax is not the power to destroy while this Court sits' (Panhandle Oil Co. v. Mississippi, 277 U. S. 218, 223 (dissent))." (dissent)) (dissent))."

But, in the Gillespie case, Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for the Court, had definitely applied the doctrine that the power to tax does involve the power to destroy.

In the Panhandle case neither the Court, nor, indeed, another Justice dissenting, was impressed by "The power to tax is not the power to destroy while this Court sits." The statement is vague and may be read to imply a power that this Court never possessed. If taken to mean that we are empowered to regulate or to limit the exertion by Congress of its power of taxation, it justly may be regarded as hyperbole; if taken to mean that this Court has power to prevent imposition by Congress of taxes laid to discourage, to destroy, or to protect, then it is in the teeth of the law. See, e. g., Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533, 548); McCray v. United States (195 U. S. 27, 53, et seq.); Magnano Co. v. Hamilton (292 U. S. 40, 44, et seq.); Cincinnati Soap Co. v. United States (301 U. S. 308).

decisions. But nowhere has that ever been suggested. However, all who are familiar with our judicial history know that entitled to great respect are the reasoned conclusions of these eminent to great respect are the reasoned conclusions of these eminent American jurists as to the true intent and meaning of the Constitution of the United States. And similarly worthy of attention are the opinions of the Attorneys General and other public officials following the reasoning of Chief Justice Taney.

Now the Court cites, as if entitled to prevail against those well-sustained opinions and the deliberate judgments of this Court, opposing views—if indeed upon examination they reasonably may be so deemed—of English-speaking judges in foreign countries.

It refers, footnote 6, to the decision of the Privy Council in Judges v. Attorney General of Saskatchewan ((1937), 2 D. L. R. 209) construing income-tax statutes of Saskatchewan. Neither 209) construing income-tax statutes of Saskatchewan. Neither the Dominion nor the Province has any law forbidding diminution of compensation of judges while in office and that decision has nothing to do with the question before us. The Australian and South African cases cited, footnotes 6 and 8, involved construction of income-tax statutes under constitutions or charters created by legislative enactments and subject to authoritative interpretation or change by the local or British Parliament. They shed no light upon the issue in this case.

The opinion claims no support from any State court decision.

upon the issue in this case.

The opinion claims no support from any State court decision. The one it cites, footnote 8, that of the Maryland Court of Appeals in Gordy v. Dennis (5 A. (2d) 69) held that under a clause in the Constitution of Maryland like that in article III, section 1, the compensation of State judges may not be taxed.

The opinion also cites, footnote 7, selected gainsaying writings of professors—some are lawyers and some are not—but without specification of or reference to the reasons upon which their views rest. And in addition it cites notes published in law reviews, some signed and some not; presumably the latter were prepared by law students. pared by law students.

The suggestion that, as citizens, judges are not immune from taxation begs the question here presented. The Constitution itself puts judges in a separate class, declaring that at stated times they shall receive for their services compensation which "shall not be diminished." And so their salaries are distinguished from income of others. The immunity extends only to compensation for their services. No question of comparison or reasonableness is involved.

Admittedly the Court now repudiates its earlier decisions upon the point here in issue. The provision defining tenure and providing for undiminishable compensation was adopted with unsual accord. There has been unanimity of opinion that, because in comparison with the legislative and executive the judicial department is much the companion of th partment is weak, its independence is essential to our system of government. These safeguards go far to insure that independence. And, from the beginning, statesmen and jurists have agreed that the clause forbids diminution of judges' compensation by any form of legislation. The clause in question is plain; no exception is expressed; none may be implied. Its unqualified command should be given effect.

For one convinced that the judgment now given is wrong, it is impossible to acquiesce or merely to note dissent. And so this opinion is written to indicate the grounds of opposition and to evidence regret that another landmark has been removed.

I am of opinion that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

POLITICAL USE OF W. P. A. MONEY

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I have addressed to the residents of Kanawha County, W. Va., a letter concerning W. P. A., and I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD, but first I desire to make a short statement regarding the

No amount of beautiful poetry or nice-sounding words can cover up or excuse the political usage of the W. P. A. money as is shown by the facts. The W.P.A. workers are finding out that many of those shedding crocodile tears for the W. P. A. funds are interested only in protecting their political friends as bosses and are trying to use the funds for political

This story of one county in my State is duplicated throughout the United States. In this one county the monthly pay roll of bosses earning more than $1,000 each charged to project-not charged to administration-amounted to $20,380. This would mean an annual expenditure of $244,560 and does not count those who received less than $1,000. That is the amount spent to pay the salaries of only 160 individuals.

If thousands are begging for food, why not take part of this tremendous overhead and feed some of the needy?

This shedding of tears by the politician cannot convince the unemployed relief client that she should be fired while the high paid continue to receive salary increases. This subject is now being investigated by me, and a further report | will be made to the people of West Virginia.

Many well-to-do individuals are being paid high salaries as W. P. A. officials. They were not named because of their knowledge of the relief problem but because they had political value through their large family connections or their financial connections.

The letter sent to the residents of Kanawha County reads as follows:

To the Residents of Kanawha County.

Dear Friends: Why are W. P. A. being fired? Where does the workers W. P. A. money go? Those questions are asked me nearly every day. The W. P. A. says it is due to lack of funds. Let's see some of the expenses of the organization:

If one were to believe the statistics of the W. P. A. staff (who are paid out of the Public Treasury to convince the people that the present handling of W. P. A. is the best), you would think that only a few cents out of every dollar went to the bosses. They try to say only 3 to 5 percent is spent for administration. The facts will disprove their statements. One of the ways they get around this administrative cost is to charge much of the expense to the projects. They claim there are only a few more than 500 adminprojects. They claim there are only a few more than 500 administrative employees in West Virginia, but they do not include the hundreds and hundreds of high-paid employees whose salaries and expenses are charged to the projects. They admit a State administrative cost of $966,217.

But a thorough check-up will show the tremendous overhead cost. I shall give you the story of Kanawha County, as based on a pay-roll survey. It was impossible for me to get the pay rolls for the entire year, but the pay rolls checked showed the following

In Kanawha County I found 160 individuals on the W. P. A. who In Kanawha County I found 160 individuals on the W. F. A. who draw more than $1,000 a year, whose salaries were charged to the projects, not to administration. I may find more. These 160 drew $244,560 a year. One hundred sixty W. P. A. workers in Kanawha County would draw only $86,720 a year if they worked every week of the year without a single lay-off for any cause. The difference between the bosses and the workers amounts to $157,840 a year, or approximately $1,000 average difference for each boss. It pays to

The difference between the amount paid 160 W. P. A. bosses and 160 W. P. A. workers would be enough to employ approximately 700 persons for 5 months. Why fire the workers and pay the high-salaried overhead?

One W. P. A. project official in Kanawha County is paid approximately $2 per hour for every hour he is employed. Yet I know there are hundreds and hundreds of men who are trying to get there are hundreds and hundreds of men who are trying to get that much a day to keep their families.

Think of that! Almost a quarter of a million dollars a year for project supervision not being charged to administration. It is easy to figure. The pay-roll check shows over $20,000 a month. Multiply that by 12, and you can figure the yearly cost.

You will note that I have referred to those who make $1,000 or more per year. I have confined my study to their cost. When they talk about the needy, ask them if they mean the ones who draw from $1,000 to $6,000 a year from the W. P. A.?

I believe while thousands in West Virginia are begging for enough to feed and clothe their families it is not wise to give a few favorites exorbitant salaries. The bosses don't want me to say this.

They are giving the needy workers 403's. They claim it is necessary to reduce expenses. Why do they start the reduction with the needy rather than with the favorite bosses?

I want to make it clear that the above figures do not include the

I want to make it clear that the above lightes do not include the salaries of those in the district or State offices. Add this to the above and you will see where the W. P. A. money goes.

I have been saying more money should go to the workers and less to the high-paid bosses. The politicians don't like that.

It is to the advantage of the W. P. A. worker to cooperate in helping to clean up W. P. A.

Some time ago I showed where more than 200 office employees of the W. P. A. in West Virginia had their salaries raised by more than $78,000 a year. If you want a copy of that record, just send me a postal card or letter to Washington and I shall be glad to send it you. I want the people to know the facts.

I am sending this letter to those who do and do not work for the

W. P. A., because everyone is interested in finding out the story.

Sincerely.

RUSH D. HOLT.

REGULATION OF MODES OF TRANSPORTATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess vesterday the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] expressed the hope that he might proceed this morning to discuss the pending bill. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall continue the discussion which began yesterday on Senate bill 2009, known as the omnibus transportation bill. For the information of Senators I wish to say that the particular subject to which I shall address myself will be found at the bottom of page 49 of the bill, in line 21, beginning with the words "Provided further." This is the provision for what is known as the pooling of revenue.

Before I enter upon the discussion of that subject I desire, as a minority Member and a new Member of this body, to pay my tribute to the distinguished chairman of the committee for the thoroughness, the fairness, and the courtesy with which he has conducted the hearings upon the bill. I also wish to pay the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee the deserved personal compliment of saying that it would be very difficult for me to conceive of a man carrying on a running discussion in this body for 4 hours with more ability, more knowledge, and a clearer capacity for statement than the distinguished Senator from Montana.

I shall now refer to what is known as pooling, and as a preface I want to say to some of the Senators who are a little uncertain that the principle involved in the provision of which I shall speak has twice been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in unanimous decisions.

The distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] yesterday referred to me as a conservative Republican. I do not know where he obtained that idea. William Allen White and I all our lives have been known as members in good standing of the lunatic fringe of the Republican Party. I am going to establish my reputation as a liberal by concurring with the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion written by the great Mr. Justice Brandeis, and then I am going to establish my reputation as a conservative by agreeing with a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court written by the late Chief Justice Taft, father of one of the distinguished Members of this body. When I can establish upon such a solid foundation a reputation both as a liberal and as a conservative, I think what I propose is entitled to careful consideration.

Mr. President, when we concluded 4 hours' discussion of this bill yesterday we had covered the field of competition between carriers. We talked about the railroads and their competition with the bus lines and the waterways; we discussed contract carriers and common carriers on the highway and on the sea; we talked about the inland waterways and the various modes of transportation and the competition between them; but, as I recall, hardly any Senator mentioned the shipper. The shipper is the man who pays the freight for any and all of these agencies of transportation; and in any consideration of a measure so important as this, the shipper is certainly entitled to consideration.

Mr. President, what brings up this question at this time? All agencies of transportation are in bad financial straits. More attention is focused upon the railroads than upon the trucks and busses and the steamship carriers; but, after all, the reason why the railroads take first place is twofold: First, their desperate situation; secondly, their relative importance in any scheme of a national transportation system.

I read from a statement prepared for me last week by the Bureau of Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which the relative importance of the various forms of transportation is set down in percentages of revenue tonmiles moved, which is the best way to set out that fact.

Assuming that all the revenue ton-miles moving by all agencies of transportation amount to 100 percent, the waterways moved 20 percent. The Bureau of Statistics did not separate the revenue ton-miles by water by the various divisions of water transportation, but the Committee of Six did. It reported, and I think correctly, that 16 percent of the total ton-miles were moved on the Great Lakes. We all know that most of the traffic moving on the Great Lakes is bulk cargo composed of iron ore, grain, limestone, and coal; and, as a matter of fact, that traffic is not in effective competition with any other form of transportation. So from the 100 percent we might just as well deduct that 16 percent to start with, which leaves 84 percent.

Then, according to the Interstate Commerce Commission, in 1937 the pipe lines handled 8.4 percent of the revenue ton-miles. Again, that is a form of transportation which is so economical that where there are trunk pipe lines there is no effective competition between those pipe lines and any other form of transportation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it disturb the Senator to ask him to repeat the proportion of transportation passing through pipe lines?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I am very happy to answer any question at any time. The statement which the Interstate Commerce Commission sent me last week for use at this time sets forth that the pipe lines—trunk lines only—handled 8.4 percent of the total revenue ton-miles. So, from the 84 percent we had after deducting the Great Lakes transportation we may take away 8 percent for the pipe lines, ignoring the fraction, leaving 76 percent of the total transportation as the amount handled by the railroads and the waterways in their various phases; and of that remainder, according to the Interstate Commerce Commission report which I hold in my hand, the steam railways handled 66 percent. In other words, 66 as compared with 76 after including pipe lines and the Great Lakes.

Mr. President, that is why no scheme of regulation, no consideration of a national transportation system, can ignore the railroads. We may charge them with many sins of omission—and I do; we may charge them with many sins of commission—and I do. I am familiar with many such instances; but, when all is said and done, the railways of the United States are the backbone of our whole transportation system. Today the situation is such that one-third of the railroad lines is in the hands of receivers or trustees, another third of the total railroad mileage of the country totters upon the brink of bankruptcy, and only one-third of the railroad mileage may be reasonably expected to survive bankruptcy if conditions should continue as they are perhaps for 3 or 5 years.

Mr. President, I make the statement upon mature consideration that there are but three exits from the present situation so far as the railroads are concerned. The first is an improvement in general business conditions which would give them 20 or 25 percent more traffic than they now handle. I am not sure, nor can any other Senator be sure, that such an improvement will come about. I fondly hope it will.

The second alternative is a blanket increase in freight rates.

The third alternative, which we will have to face within 5 years, is Government ownership of the railroads.

A railroad system cannot be operated with two-thirds of it in bankruptcy. So I shall address myself, not to the question of an improvement in business, which is so highly problematical; not to the question of Government ownership, to which I am opposed; I shall address myself to the feasibility of a general increase in freight rates and, if that is to come, how it should be handled.

It may be of interest to the Senate to know that in years starting in 1913 there have been eight percentage or horizontal increases in freight rates.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Herring in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, we are all hungry, I might say, to hear the Senator's discussion of the committee amendment, which we assumed he would cover in his address. Does the language employed in the amendment contemplate increased freight rates?

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. McNARY. The discussion now is wholly apart from the Senator's amendment?

Mr. REED. No; it is a part of the bill, because this section of the bill, which was approved in the committee, deals with the avails of a percentage increase in freight rates.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in common with most other Senators I have not had an opportunity to dissect the bill. Does the Senator contemplate by his amendment that the rates which will be charged will represent increases over existing rates?

Mr. REED. Yes; if the Commission should authorize increased rates. I think the point of the Senator from Oregon is well taken. Of course, I really think that in his capacity as minority leader he should have read the bill through, but in order to get before the Senate an intelligent set-up, let me read the provision to which I am referring. I had hoped Senators would read the bill, so that I might save my voice. This is the provision which we are discussing:

That whenever the Commission is of opinion, after hearing upon general application of carriers in any rate area or territory or group, or in the country as a whole, or upon its own initiative, after hearing, that increases in rates, fares, or charges should be permitted upon a percentage or other uniform basis because of the revenue needs of the affected carriers, considered collectively, it may provide for the pooling or division of the avails of such increases, or any part thereof, among the affected carriers so as to enable, to the extent reasonably practicable, each of them to afford adequate transportation service, giving due consideration, among other things, to the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator having made a study of this question, I should like to ask him how the provision he has read is comparable with the recapture clause which Congress repealed some years ago.

Mr. REED. Will the distinguished Senator from Nevada have patience with me while I develop the theme? I shall return to that point, I assure the Senator.

It has been suggested from the floor and in conversation that perhaps this pooling provision went into the bill by the back door. Nothing could be farther from the fact. I hold in my hand a message from the President of the United States to the Seventy-fifth Congress, House Document 583, in which he transmitted recommendations to meet the transportation emergency which he declared existed at that time. Upon page 40 of that document will be found this question alluded to, and a method of dealing with the situation proposed.

Later, when the subject came up in the Congress, the House of Representatives started hearings before the Senate did. The House asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for an expression of opinion upon various and sundry phases of the bill.

The question was raised here yesterday as to whether or not a letter from the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission reflected the sentiment of the entire Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has a legislative committee. Joseph B. Eastman happens to be chairman of that committee. I think, though I am not certain, that the other members are Commissioners Mahaffie and Splawn, and possibly Chairman Caskie may be a member, though I do not recall.

This document, which is a House committee print, has been extensively used, because the Commission offered it to us in order to save duplication. For the benefit of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], who raised the question yesterday as to the extent to which a report from the legislative committee represented the views of the entire Commission, in transmitting the letter to the House of Representatives the chairman of the legislative committee used this language on page 1:

These matters have had the careful consideration of the Commission, and I am authorized to submit this report on its behalf.

On page 12 of the document from which I shall now read briefly, and perhaps I will come back to it later, the committee made the following statement as reflecting the views and recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission: We believe it probable that there are numerous situations in which railroad traffic, especially less-than-carload traffic or earnings, could be pooled to the advantage of both railroads and the public, and that it is desirable that the Commission be given authority not only to permit but to require such arrangements under appropriate conditions.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I myself should not want to suggest that the provision in question was brought in by the "back door," but it is true, is it not, that it was not in the bill as it was originally introduced?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. So far as my recollection goes—and, of course, I was not present at all the hearings—I cannot recall that the matter was discussed in the hearings held on the bill. Am I right or wrong about that?

Mr. REED. There was reference made to the matter of pooling in the course of the hearings. The distinguished Senator from Maine is familiar with the history of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. REED. As a member of the committee, I took the bill as it was written, and the hearings were held upon the bill as it was written. Since the hearings terminated the committee made a number of additions, a number of deletions, a number of changes.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that.

Mr. REED. And the clause in question is one of the additions.

Mr. WHITE. I wanted to understand the history of the provision. It was not in the bill as it was originally introduced in the Senate?

Mr. REED. The railroads are opposed to it.

Mr. WHITE. I was going to say that. It was not recommended by the railroad management when representatives of the railroad management appeared before the committee. I am correct in that statement, am I not?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Maine has stated the matter very mildly. The railroads not only did not approve it, but the Association of American Railroads, which is the servant of the rich railroads of America, and which talks much about a national transportation system but does not do anything about it, is opposed to the provision.

Mr. WHITE. The railroads are opposed to it. Let us leave it right there.

Mr. REED. Not all the railroads, but those speaking through the Association of American Railroads.

Mr. WHITE. Those who appeared before the committee by their representatives were opposed to it?

Mr. REED. So far as Judge Fletcher and Mr. Gray are concerned, that is correct.

Mr. WHITE. The representatives of the railroad brother-hoods did not urge the adoption of the provision before the committee, did they?

Mr. REED. I do not think they took any position on the pooling of revenues.

Mr. WHITE. They did not urge it, did they?

Mr. REED. Two representatives of the brotherhoods appeared before the committee, but they took no position on this particular matter.

Mr. WHITE. Then the answer to my question is that they did not urge it upon the committee?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. That is all I wanted to ask about that particular matter. Who appeared before the committee to urge the inclusion of the provision in question?

Mr. REED. In the course of his testimony, Mr. Luther Walter, a leading practitioner before the Interstate Commerce Commission and a trustee of the Chicago Great Western Railroad, discussed it. My impression is that Mr. Eastman and myself discussed it when he appeared before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. My recollection is that the first witness the Senator named was the only one who urged the matter upon the committee, and I do not recall that that witness devoted any particular time or attention to it.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes, Mr. President; he was very strongly in favor of it.

Mr. WHITE. So really he is the single witness who affirmatively urged the provision upon the committee, and it was put into the bill by the subcommittee. Is that not an accurate statement of the situation?

Mr. REED. It was put into the bill by the committee which worked upon it; yes.

Mr. WHITE. The inclusion of the provision in the bill was recommended by the subcommittee.

Mr. REED. I am sorry that the distinguished Senator from Maine did not spend more time working on the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I regret it also, but I was compelled to be

Mr. REED. We would have been very happy to have had the aid and cooperation of the distinguished Senator from Maine, who happens to be the ranking minority member, but we could not often reach him.

Mr. WHITE. I agree that is true.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the junior Senator from Virginia. Mr. BYRD. I should like to call attention, on page 381 of the hearings, to the following which occurred while Mr. Norman was a witness before the committee. Mr. Norman asked whether it was contemplated to consider a mandatory pooling provision, and the chairman said:

It is not going to be done—not at this session of Congress, anyway.

No hearings were held before the full committee with respect to the provision, and I think no hearings were held on it before the subcommittee, and notification was given by the chairman that it was not contemplated to put it in the bill, and no effort was made to have hearings on it.

Mr. REED. I think the chairman made an offhand answer to the question, such as anyone might make. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission—and that is probably what the chairman had in mind—goes very much further than the amendment does. The Interstate Commerce Commission, on page 12 of their letter to the House of Representatives, recommend the enactment of a law which would give the Commission authority to pool not only revenues from rate increases but existing revenues, existing traffic, and existing facilities. I think that is what the chairman had in mind when he made that reply to Mr. Norman, from Louisville, whom I know very well.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Kansas, I will say that I found on examining the record that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] is correct, and that it was wrong when I said yesterday that I had not made that statement. I must confess that I did not have any recollection of having made the statement, but it was called to my attention that I had made the statement.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator was referring to a general pooling proposition.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Recurring to the question by Mr. Norman with respect to the matter of pooling, the chairman said: It is not going to be done-not at this session of Congress anyway.

No effort was made to have hearings, and no request was made by those in opposition to pooling to be heard. The point I am making to the Senator from Kansas is that this most important matter was inserted in the bill by the subcommittee without hearings either by the subcommittee or the full committee, although all other parts of the bill were very carefully considered and full hearings were had.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Virginia will permit, I wish to say that in the hearings Mr. Norman was talking about this matter, which appears on page 381 of the hearings:

House bill 2531 provides that the Commission may compel pooling of earnings. There again we say you are going back to the fallacy that was in the recapture-clause provision, which had to be abandoned for a number of reasons.

That will be found on page 381 of the hearings.

It is not because I have any particular fancy for a pooling of revenues that I urged upon the committee the inclusion of the amendment, but it is because I have concern for the shippers of America who have to pay the bill. They are the most important factor in the situation.

It was testified by a competent authority in the hearings before the committee that in 1937, when about half the railroads had a net income and the other half had no net income, that if a 3.9 percent addition had been made to the freight rates, either in the form of increased rates or as a surcharge upon freight bills, that the avails of such 3.9 percent increase would have been sufficient to meet the legitimate needs of all the carriers, provided the increase could be gotten to the railroads which needed it, whereas if it were undertaken to make a general increase which would be sufficient to accomplish the same purpose but which would permit the railroads which did not need the increase to keep all the increase, the shippers would have to pay a 12- or 15percent increase in rates. That is the heart of this question.

I shall answer the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] as well as the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. White], for no voice from New England should ever be raised against the pooling of railroad revenues. I shall show that no section of this country has so directly benefited by the application of this very principle as has New England.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The pooling order is predicated, as I understand, upon an authorized increase in the rates?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. If authority were given the Commission to order pooling, I wonder if such authority could be given without being predicated upon increasing the rates, having in mind that the rates in the official territory are one thing; the rates in the able Senator's region are 71 percent higher than the rates in official territory; and the rates in the southwest region, from which I come, are 75 percent higher. I am afraid of anything that even smacks of an increase in rates. I do not want to give the carriers, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or anybody else the opportunity to raise freight rates in our territory. If pooling could be predicated upon a decrease in rates, to use a common expression, we "might have something."

Mr. REED. I am very much afraid that that could not be done. Very few railroads are in a prosperous condition at this time. The Chesapeake & Ohio, the Norfolk & Western. the Union Pacific, the Pennsylvania, and perhaps half a dozen others are in pretty fair shape. However, many railroads whose credit is usually good, whose earnings are usually adequate for their needs, and which have always been in the habit of meeting their fixed charges are either in the hands of receivers or trustees or are threatened with that fate. In my solemn judgment, they face a situation which, if continued, will result in Government ownership of railroads in 5 years. I am trying to avoid that result.

As was stated yesterday, all the provisions of the bill would stabilize transportation and give equality of regulation. However, very few provisions of the bill would help the financial situation of the railroads. I concur in the statement made by the chairman of the committee near the end of the debate yesterday that the bill is the first proposal which has come to the Senate that means anything in the way of preserving the weaker roads.

I shall prove the remainder of my case from the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REED. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As I understand, the funds which are raised for the purpose of pooling can only come from increased rates.

Mr. REED. That is correct; and if there should be no increased rates, there could be no pool.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the common carriers by water should receive an increase in rates, the funds from the increase would go into a pool to be paid to the poor railroads.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that when we wrote this provision we failed, through an oversight, to include, in line 23 on page 49, the language "upon general application of carriers by railroad." It is my purpose at the proper time to offer an appropriate amendment. The pooling applies only to railroads.

There is no thought of trying to pool the earnings of railroads with the earnings of water carriers and of motor carriers. That provision was an inadvertency that slipped into

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That may be true. The bill as it now reads is very plain.

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct. I have tried to make the explanation. I assure the Senator that such an amendment will be offered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. In reading the amendment hastily a few moments ago, I concluded that restrictions are not applicable to motor carriers or water carriers, but only to railroads.

Mr. REED. In order to make it clear-

Mr. McNARY. I think it is clear. If we have a coordinated system of transportation, including railroads, water carriers, and motor carriers, would not the bill throw out of line the rate structure of the country?

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. McNARY. If we should increase the rates of the railroads, and divide the increased earnings among the railroads, without touching the competitive water and motor carriers, would we not disturb the harmony and balance between the various divisions of the rate structure?

Mr. REED. Certainly not.

Mr. McNARY. I merely ask the question. The Senator knows, and I do not.

Mr. REED. Certainly not. We may decrease the rates of the railroads, or we may increase the rates of the railroads. The water carriers and motor carriers are at liberty at any time to come before the Interstate Commerce Commission and move to raise or lower their rates. The bill specifically prohibits the Interstate Commerce Commission from undertaking to relate railroad rates to the rates upon water or the rates upon highways.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. In confirmation of what the Senator has said, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the same amendment, on page 50, there is specific reference in the text to railroad property. That reference confirms what the Senator intended to imply.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is there anything in the bill which would require the Interstate Commerce Commission, in fixing rail and water rates, to see that no rate is fixed which would kill the water carrier? If the water rate is not high enough, that is one thing; but it seems to me the railroads would not be so highly concerned about including water carriers in the bill if they did not think their inclusion would help the railroads.

If there is not already such a provision in the bill, I intend to offer an amendment to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission may not so manipulate rates as to put water carriers out of business or drive business away from them when, perhaps, the traffic ought to move by water. Certain kinds of traffic, under any conditions, ought to move by water rather than by rail.

Mr. REED. I shall be very happy to answer the question of the Senator from Texas. The declaration of policy says that the act shall be so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each form of transportation.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is a beautiful, mouth-filling phrase; but what does it mean?

Mr. REED. On page 27, there is this provision:

That differences in the classifications, rates, fares, charges, rules, regulations, and practices of a water carrier in respect of water transportation from those in effect by a rail carrier with respect to rail transportation shall not, in and of themselves, be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage, or an unfair or destructive competitive practice within the meaning of section 1 of this act.

Then we have a rate-making rule which I shall read for the benefit of the Senator from Texas:

SEC. 30. It shall be the duty of the Commission in the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates, to give due of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates, to give due consideration, among other factors, to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient transportation service by such carrier or carriers at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable such carrier or carriers, under honest economical and efficient management to provide under honest, economical, and efficient management to provide such service. When used in this section the term "rates" means "rates, fares, and charges, and all regulations and practices relat-ing thereto."

I will say to the Senator from Texas that in three different places in the bill the committee tried to deal with the question, because it was one of the very much-discussed questions. I wish to move along as rapidly as I may.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Before the Senator leaves that point, why does not the amendment refer to the pooling of water transportation and of transportation by trucks? The bill is a general transportation bill, and if increases given to the railroads are to be pooled, why should not the same policy apply to the water and truck carriers and to all forms of transportation?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will be good enough to withhold his question until after I have read the Supreme Court decisions, I shall be very happy to give him an answer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill covers not only inland water transportation but all coastwise shipping, does it not?

Mr. REED. It covers inland waterways, coastal, and intercoastal shipping.

Mr. CONNALLY. What does the Senator mean by "intercoastal"?

Mr. REED. Between the two coasts.

Mr. CONNALLY. From the Pacific to the Atlantic or the Atlantic to the Pacific, as the case may be?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That term covers a great deal of territory.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Unless the bill were properly drawn, I can see how it might work irreparable injury not alone to the shipping interests but to the people of the United States. because if the law permitted the railroads by fixing rates to kill all coastwise and intercoastal shipping it would be a very serious handicap to the commerce of the whole United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator-

Mr. CONNALLY. I am asking for information. Mr. WHEELER. Exactly. I understand.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not pose as an expert on these questions. I must rely on Senators who know.

Mr. WHEELER. This question has been before the Interstate Commerce Committee almost ever since I have been a member of that committee-for 16 years-and it has been discussed backward and forward. It came up before the committee in connection with the question of repealing the fourth section. When the question of repealing the fourth section was before the committee, as it has been ever since I have been a member of the committee, the late Senator Gooding was fighting for it, as was the late Senator Walsh, of Montana. The question has been constantly discussed. The railroads wanted to repeal the fourth section so that they might put into operation any rates they chose when they came into competition with water transportation. We kept the fourth section. As I said yesterday on the floor of the Senate, I was responsible for preserving it during the last two or three sessions of Congress because of the fact that such a measure would have passed the committee if I had not opposed it, and it undoubtedly would have passed the Senate. It twice passed the House unanimously. The railroads said, "You are permitting the water carriers to establish any rates they choose, whether or not such rates pay the out-of-pocket costs. In other words, you are turning them loose and saying to them, 'If you want to take the business away from the railroads, you can cut your rates, you can put into effect any rate you desire,' but when it comes to us, then we are told, 'You cannot put into operation an out-of-pocket rate, you have got to keep your rate at such and such a point." The railroads state with a great deal of force, in my judgment, that they ought to be placed in the same position as are the water carriers. I said to them repeatedly when the matter was before the Interstate Commerce Committee, "Well, what the Congress ought to do is to place in some impartial body the regulation of rates of all competing forms of transportation." No one could complain about that. If the railroads had been permitted to do what they wanted to do, then, they could have cut rates, in my judgment, as they did on a previous occasion before there was regulation; they cut the rates so that they put the water carriers out of business; and then, of course, they raised their rates. I said that we did not want to see such a thing happen again in the United States of America: and that would have happened, in my judgment, if we had repealed the fourth section.

I suggested, the President of the United States suggested, the Interstate Commerce Commission suggested, that the thing to do was to to place in an impartial body the right to regulate the rates of the water carriers, not so that they would throw business over to the railroads but so that they could not deliberately take out-of-pocket costs in order to break down the rates of the railroad carriers and take over their business.

It seems to me that no one who is fair and no one who wants to be just to the railroads and to all other forms of transportation can object to such a course. As I pointed out yesterday, we have deepened and widened the Mississippi River channels; we have spent over a billion dellars on the rivers of the country; more money is sought to be spent on them. I have been one of those who have stood up on the floor of the Senate and voted for such appropriations and urged them. Now, those who have come to the Congress and asked for money from the Treasury of the United States with which to deepen and widen the waterways in order that their ships could have a water course on which they could travel from St. Louis up the Mississippi River to St. Paul, are protesting and saying, "We do not want to have our rates regulated." The railroads have to pay part of the expense of channel improvement for the water carriers.

No one has gone into the abuses of the railroads and fought the abuses of the railroads to the extent the Committee on Interstate Commerce has done. We have investigated them and shown them up as has not been done in years by the Congress of the United States; but I would not be fair to myself and I would not be fair to the general public if I did not say that, notwithstanding the abuses that have been going on, the railroads are entitled to a square deal; they are entitled to have their competitors regulated not so as to enable them to raise their rates to give them business, but so that their competitors may not put into effect out-of-pocket rates—rates upon which they lose money simply for the purpose of breaking down the railroad rates.

The Illinois Central and all the other railroads in the Middle West—and I submit that the railroads in the Middle West are worse off than are almost any other group of railroads in the United States—pay taxes to furnish the channel for their competitors, and their competitors can cut their rates to any point they desire and then say, "We will not be regulated."

On the other hand, when the railroads ask that their rates be reduced so as to meet that water competition, who comes there and opposes such action? It is the water carriers, saying to the railroads, "You must not reduce your rates; if you do you will put us out of business." Water carriers are unregulated, and yet they appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission saying, "You should not reduce railroad rates." Then they come here to the Senate and say to the Members of the Senate, and whisper around the cloakrooms, "We are doing this in the interest of the general public." Doing what "in the interest of the general public"? In one breath they say they have brought down railroad rates, and, on the other hand, they protest every reduction of railroad rates that comes before the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is not fair; it is not just; and I submit there is no one on this floor who can get up and defend the position of the water carriers. The water carriers upon the Mississippi River are in the worst position of any carriers to come here and fight this piece of legislation. It is just pure selfishness and greediness upon their part when they do it, and they have not a leg to stand upon when it comes to honesty and decency before this body.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia and also the attention of the Senator from Maine, if he is present, to page 804 and the following pages where pooling as a possible remedy for some of the troubles that we are facing is rather extensively discussed. It is not a new subject. It has been discussed time and again.

Now let me proceed, for I do not wish to take all day on this subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I am not mistaken this provision is comparable to what we called "the recapture clause" in the Transportation Act?

Mr. REED. I may say again to the Senator from Nevada I am going to get to that point very shortly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may not be able to be present at that time, and I wish to make a suggestion, if the Senator will bear with me. The Senator will recall that "the recapture clause," as we termed it at that time, resulted in a pool of many million dollars.

The Senator will recall that the railroads with large earnings, not the small railroads, came before the Congress and demanded that that "recapture clause" be repealed, and it was repealed, resulting, if I may express it bluntly, in what, to my mind, was one of the biggest steals that was ever put over by a legislative body, inadvertently, because the pool had resulted in the accumulation of a vast sum of money that was mulcted from the shippers of the country but never returned to them. I wonder if the Senator agrees in part with what I have said.

Mr. REED. I agree in part. I could go further into the history of "the recapture clause." I happened to be chairman of the Kansas Public Utilities Commission back in those days, and I appeared before the House Committee on Interstate Commerce in 1923, representing all the western State commissions. At that time I appeared as a witness for 2 days, for the committee was kind enough to ask me to come back the second day, when I thought they would throw me out, having occupied all the first day. However, I advised the committee that "the recapture clause" should be repealed, because it could not be made to work. I think the provision in the pending bill can be made to work.

It is not an easy task, but I am going to get to that later. At present, however, I should like to discuss the philosophy of pooling as developed in the Supreme Court of the United States. I feel a degree of incompetence in discussing legal questions with so many able constitutional lawyers sitting around me.

In 1914 there was a horizontal 5-percent increase, and there was a 15-percent increase in 1917. The Director General of Railroads increased rates 25 percent when the Government took over the railroads in 1917, and when the railroads ceased to be operated by the Government, the Interstate Commerce Commission had to impose enormous increases, amounting to 40 percent in the eastern territory, 35 percent in the Midwest, if my section may be called the Midwest, 25 percent, I think, in the South, and 25 percent in the far West. That was on top of the 25 percent that the Director General had increased the rates.

What happened? There ensued the most desperate situation in the history of the railroads of the United States. I hope that the Senator from Vermont, who is the only New England Senator within the sound of my voice at the moment, will carry this message to his colleagues from New England, because it is important to them. The railroads in New England are in worse shape than are the railroads in any other part of the United States.

Now, I quote from the opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the Supreme Court in a case which, for the benefit of the lawyers of the Senate, I will say is to be found in Two Hundred and Sixty-first United States Reports, page 190.

The distinguished Mr. Justice Brandeis said:

The deficiency in income of the New England lines in 1920 was so great that even before the raise in wages ordered by the Railroad Labor Board an increase in freight revenues of 47.40 percent was estimated to be necessary to secure them a fair return. On a like estimate, the increased revenues required to give the same return to carriers in the trunk-line territory—

Which runs from New York to Buffalo and Pittsburgh—was only 29.76 percent, and to carriers in Central Freight Association territory 24.31 percent.

The Central Freight Association territory being from Pittsburgh and Buffalo to Chicago and St. Louis.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, to meet the needs of the New England railroads, on their application ordered that the division of the through rates should be changed so as to give the New England railroads 15 percent greater division of the through rates than had been agreed upon between the carriers themselves; and that was the first of the important cases to go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call attention to the fact that notwithstanding that relief, we now have in New England a great railway system in process of reorganization and receivership. We have another great railroad, not so great, that is on the verge of bankruptcy. The State of Vermont, for example, is doing extraordinary things to try to save that railroad line. It is making sacrifices and doing many things to save the life of the railroad for the service of the public, notwithstanding the benefits to which the Senator from Kansas refers.

Mr. REED. For the information of the Senator from Vermont, I desire to state that I am not saying this in any critical way at all. I am merely illustrating the processes under which matters of this kind are handled.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator said, in beginning his thesis, that three fundamental alternatives must be recognized in order to save the railroad situation and maintain the status quo: One, we must have a revival of business; or two, we must have an increase in freight rates; or, three, we must have Government ownership.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. The amendment of which the Senator now speaks contemplates an increase in freight rates, redistributed among the railroads according to the judgment of the Commission. What extent of increase has the Senator in mind? What was proposed in the hearings before the committee?

I am interested in increases in freight rates. We in the far West pay the freight rates. In order to bring about an increase, the Senator must have in mind some sum or some structure so that would justify the contemplation of his amendment.

Mr. REED. Let me inform the distinguished Senator from Oregon that all I am trying to have incorporated into the bill is a plan under which the Interstate Commerce Commission may handle, to the advantage of the shippers and the public, any increase that they may in the future find necessary. I am not suggesting that there should be or that there will be an increase. All I am suggesting is that we have had eight percentage increases in 25 years; and if we should have another one—and I do not know that we shall; this bill may never have any such effect—if we should, I want that increase to rest as lightly as possible upon the public and the shippers of the country.

Now, may I proceed and read what the Supreme Court said about the legal questions involved in this so-called pooling?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want to press my position; but, in my judgment, it is important in determining one's attitude with respect to this amendment. Does the Senator believe it is essential in order to preserve the railroad structure that there be an increase in freight rates?

Mr. REED. I repeat the declaration which I made according to my very best judgment after a lifetime of experience with the transportation question—that either we must have a revival in business that will increase the volume of traffic on the railroads 20 or 25 percent, or we must have an increase in rates that will relieve their immediate and urgent necessities, or within 5 years we shall have Government ownership. Senators may take their choice. I am trying to take the choice which seems to me to be wise from the standpoint of the public interest.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. Referring to the answer made by the able Senator from Kansas to the interrogatory propounded by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], am I correct in thus analyzing it?—

The bill, of course, does not provide for Government ownership.

Mr. REED. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill does not provide for an increased volume of business.

Mr. REED. It could not.

Mr. McCARRAN. It could not. Therefore the bill provides for an increase in freight rates.

Mr. REED. I beg to differ with the Senator from Nevada. If he will permit me to make a blunt statement, the bill does nothing of the kind. We have had eight percentage increases in 25 years. All the bill provides is that if we have another one, the increase—not the present revenues of the railroads, but the amount accruing from any increase in the future—shall be handled thus-and-so.

Mr. McCARRAN. It must be an increase from one of three sources. I am taking the Senator's analysis. It must be an increase from Government ownership, it must be an increase from an increase of business, or it must be an increase by reason of increased freight rates. The Senator has answered me that the bill does not provide for increased freight rates.

Mr. REED. Of course not.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator tell the Senate whether the bill provides for benefiting the railroads of the country?

Mr. REED. I think the bill as a whole will be beneficial to all the transportation interests of the country, considering the transportation system as a whole. The railroads will get some benefits: I think the motor transportation interests will get some benefits: I think the waterways will get some benefits from a stabilization of rates and an equality of regulations; but I agree with the statement of the chairman of the committee yesterday that in all the things that were discussed yesterday there is no answer to the railroad problem as it presently stands. I do not claim that the chairman used that exact language, but I think that is the thought he expressed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I take it, then, from the expression of the Senator from Kansas, that we may not look for any benefit flowing to the railroads by reason of the passage of Mr. REED. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned, let me repeat to the Senator from Nevada what I said yesterday. Mr. McCARRAN. I did not refer to the Senator's remark, because I did not hear him. I am sorry.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I understand that, but yesterday a Senator asked me if the railroads would not benefit by the regulation of the water carriers. Candidly, I think there would be very little benefit to the railroads from water-carrier regulation.

The Senator from Nevada has been opposed to the repeal of the so-called fourth section, the long-and-short-haul section of the Interstate Commerce Act. The reason why the railroads wanted that section repealed was that the water carriers, which are unregulated, may cut their rates to any point to which they want to cut them, but the railroads may not cut railroad rates in order to compete with the water carriers. Now, we must do one of two things; we must either repeal the fourth section and turn the railroads loose and let them compete as they want to do with their unregulated competitors, or we must regulate the water carriers upon a reasonable basis, so that they may not indulge in cutthroat competition and then protest when the railroads want

Much has been said about the general public deriving benefits from the bill. I will not vouch for the statement, but I understand that one company ships automobiles and parts through the Panama Canal and up to Los Angeles. They charge for the automobile, however, the Detroit price f. o. b. freight to Los Angeles. In other words, they stick the money in their pockets, and they say to the consumer, "We are charging you for the railroad transportation"; but the railroad does not get it, nor does the consumer get it. The only person who gets it is the automobile manufacturer. The same thing is true of steel and oil and lumber and various other commodities.

to compete with them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, the same thing is true with reference to the caravan system. In other words, the automobile companies run caravans of automobiles across the country, but the purchaser is charged the freight rate.

Mr. WHEELER. The purchaser is charged the freight rate. In my judgment, the only thing that can be said in favor of regulating the water carriers is that regulation would stabilize the industry. The water carriers are not in good condition. Many of the water carriers are in exactly the same position as the railroads. They are "broke" because they need what everybody needs-more transportation. In my judgment, this bill will tend to stabilize the watercarrier industry, as it likewise will tend to stabilize and put on an equal basis all forms of transportation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I trust the Senator will pardon me if I interrupt just a little further. I did not wish to break into the Senator's excellent discourse. I am taking now what the Senator from Montana has said, together with what I gathered from the most enlightening remarks of the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Montana says this bill, if enacted, will stabilize conditions.

Mr. REED. I said the same thing.

Mr. McCARRAN. How is it going to stabilize them? If I may answer my own question, it is going to stabilize them by enabling the water carriers to raise their own rates. They will have to raise their rates, or the rates will be raised to be comparable with those of rail transportation. It cannot be otherwise, if they are stabilized.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. The Senator is in error with reference to that, because, as the bill was originally introduced and came before the committee, it did not contain the provisions which are now in it. We see in the bill provision that the Commission shall not raise the rates of the water carriers in order to put them on a parity with railroad rates. We want to preserve competition between the railroads and the water carriers, but the water rates will only be regulated, giving to the water carriers the inherent advantages which they can get because of the fact that they can provide cheaper transportation. For 10 years while I was a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the motor carriers opposed regulation. They said, "If you pass this bill regulating motor carriers the Interstate Commerce Commission will raise the rates of the motor carriers and put the motor carriers out of business in order to protect the railroads." They said, "We can haul freight cheaper than can the railroads." We said, "There is nothing in the bill making such provision." We included a provision with reference to inherent advantages. The railroads have complained and stated that the Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of being railroad minded, is bus and truck minded, and that there has been too much favoritism shown to the busses and the trucks as against the railroads. Today the bus and truck interests are in favor of the pending bill. I have a letter from one of the contract carriers in which he states:

My DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: I have just learned from C. D. Todd, executive secretary of the contract carrier division of the American Trucking Association, that a subcommittee of the legislative com-Trucking Association, that a subcommittee of the legislative committee of our national association had passed a number of resolutions dealing with proposed changes in S. 2009. Some of these proposed changes would apply definitely to regulation of contract carriers. The committee in question was not in any sense representative of the motor carrier industry—of the nine members, only one was a contract carrier operator.

The American Trucking Association, by resolution adopted in one was a contract carrier operator.

The American Trucking Association, by resolution adopted in their annual convention in 1937, granted to the natural divisions of the industry self-autonomy and authorized those natural divisions to prosecute their claims individually on all controversial matters affecting two or more divisions of the industry. It was further agreed that the association as such would not participate in any activities involving controversial issues.

The action of the subcommittee in Washington yesterday is, in my opinion, in direct violation of the organization's rules of procedure, and I desire to take this opportunity as a vice president of that organization and chairman of the contract carrier division to notify you that our division does not consider itself bound by the action of this subcommittee, and our division seeks no change in S. 2009 as at present amended and indicated in committee print So 2009 as at present amended and indicated in committee print No. 6. Our division further urgently requests that the Senate not change to any extent the language now contained in section 8 of that bill, which deals with the filing of schedules of contract carriers.

As chairman of the contract carrier division of the American Trucking Association, I wish to advise that you are at liberty, in the event you deem it advisable, to make known to the Members of the Senate our division's position with respect to this proposed legis-

Mr. McCARRAN. I am thoroughly familiar with the attitude of the trucking industry.

Mr. WHEELER. There came before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate a representative of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line, and also General Ashburn, the president of a Government-owned line. Those gentlemen appeared in favor of the bill. Likewise a number of people engaged in general intercoastal water transportation appeared before the committee, and they have said to me privately that they were in favor of the proposed legislation. In my judgment there is a small minority opposed to the bill, but all the more responsible people engaged in the business are in favor of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not so enlightened as I should be in the matter. I have taken the remarks of the Senator from Montana on yesterday, and I have taken the remarks of the Senator from Kansas today, and I have gained the impression, not a conclusion but an impression, that those who favor the legislation favor an increase of rates.

Mr. WHEELER. That is not the case. Mr. McCARRAN. I am going to recur to the remarks of the able Senator from Kansas. I cannot get away from them. I am taking his three points of analysis. In other words, the bill, if it brings about a benefit at all to the industry of shipping in this country, must bring it about by an increase of rates.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with that.

Mr. McCARRAN. That was the remark of the Senator from Kansas

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with such a philosophy of the bill in the slightest degree.

Mr. REED. If I may break in, that is not the philosophy of the bill. I have never stated anything that could be so

Mr. McCARRAN. Did I not draw the Senator's attention to the three points which he said would bring about a change of conditions?

Mr. REED. Yes; and if the Senator will let me, I would preface that with the statement that every man in this country who knows the first elements of the railroad situation realizes that there has to be an increase in the railroad revenue.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. How will that come about? Mr. REED. That can only be brought about in one of Mr. McCARRAN. That is, an increase of rates under the pending bill?

Mr. REED. No; the bill has nothing to do with it.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator told me that the bill did not involve Government ownership.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. And that it did not involve an increase of business. Naturally, anyone would know that. Therefore, the Senator's third point was that it must involve an increase of rates; otherwise there would be no benefit to the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. If there should be in the future an increase in rates, the increase should be so handled as to be in the public interest. That is all. It would still be in the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me consider it from another angle. If, following the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, there should be no increase of rates following in natural flow, as the Senator terms it, then there would be no benefit from the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so. As a matter of fact. the bill does not in the slightest degree change the present law with reference to either lowering or increasing railroad rates.

Mr. McCARRAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I may be wrong-he knows the bill and I do not-but the bill provides for consolidation by the Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. No; the Senator is wrong about that. Mr. McCARRAN. It provides for consolidation even without hearings.

Mr. WHEELER. No; the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am glad to be corrected, of course. Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is mistaken about that. am familiar with the bill; and if I am not familiar with it and do not know what is in it, then there is something wrong with me.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is nothing wrong with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. There is nothing now in the bill which would permit general consolidation of railroads without submitting the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission. There can be consolidation of railroads at the present time. If a consolidation were proposed under the provision of the bill it would have to be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Commission would have to take care of labor if a consolidation were brought about. There was a Washington agreement, and that agreement provided that labor must be taken care of.

Mr. McCARRAN. If that is in the bill, I must ask the Senator from Montana, or the Senator from Kansas, to whom I sincerely apologize for taking up his time, to show the Senate where it appears in the bill, because my rather hurried study of the bill has not disclosed it.

Mr. WHEELER. This is the provision of the bill:

That, with respect to any transaction under this section involving motor vehicle or motor-vehicle operations, approval of such transaction may be given, without a hearing if in the judgment of the Commission a hearing is not necessary to enable it to make the Commission a hearing is not necessary to enable to to make the findings herein specified. Such approval may be upon such terms and conditions as the Commission shall find to be just and reasonable in the premises: Provided, however, That in the case of application for unification of motor carriers by a carrier by railroad, or any person which is controlled by such a carrier or affiliated therewith within the meaning of paragraph (6) of this section, the Commission shall not extend an approximation the aminated therewith within the meaning of paragraph (b) of this section, the Commission shall not enter an order approving the unification unless it finds that the transaction proposed will promote the public interest by enabling such carrier by railroad to use service by motor vehicle to public advantage in its operations and will not unduly restrain competition.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wonder if the able chairman of the committee, and the Senator from Kansas, who now supports him, would consent to striking out the words "without a hearing." I think that is beside the question we have been discussing.

Mr. WHEELER. That applies only to the unification of small motor-carrier companies.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope so.
Mr. WHEELER. There may be some small motor carriers which desire to unify their lines. There are some in the Senator's State, and some in Montana. This provision was inserted at the instance of the motor carriers, who wanted it. There may be some small motor carrier in the Senator's State which desires to buy out another motor carrier, and we did not think that under such circumstances they should be required to come to Washington and have a hearing; that the Commission could send out an investigator, and if it was found to be a small matter, the transaction could be accomplished without a hearing.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is beside the question that was uppermost at the time I interrupted the Senator from Kansas. However, I am asking whether there may be a consolidation without a hearing in the case of railroads. I have tried to get away from the motor-carrier matter entirely.

Mr. WHEELER. That was stricken out on page 172. It Provided, That approval of any transaction subject to the provisions of this section may be given without hearing if in the judgment of the Commission a hearing is not necessary to enable it to make appropriate findings.

We struck that out of the bill. That is one of the amendments that were inserted by the committee, and I hope the amendment will be approved. The question was raised by the railroad brotherhoods, and the provision was stricken out at the request of the railroad brotherhoods.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is rather incidental to the matter that is being discussed. I hope I will not find it necessary to interrupt the Senator from Kansas again.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brown in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Earlier today I asked the Senator from Kansas if the amendment were adopted whether it would dislocate the present rate structure which applies to motor carriers, water carriers, and railroads? I understood the Senator to say "No."
Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have not been very happy or satisfied with that answer, because it seems very plain to me that if an increase of railroad rates were authorized and directed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it would disturb the rate structures of the motor carriers and water carriers which are operating in competition with the railroad lines.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have such a high opinion of the ability and intelligence of the Senator from Oregon—

Mr. McNARY. I agree with what the Senator may say in that respect, so we will not discuss it further. But—

Mr. REED. The last increase in railroad freight rates was on March 18, 1938, just a little over a year ago. The railroads sought a 15-percent increase. An increase of 10 percent upon some commodities was allowed, and an increase of 5 percent upon others. The previous increase in railroad rates was in 1937, in an application decided October 19, 1937. Both those increases were allowed since the passage of the Motor Carrier Act of 1935. The increases had no more effect upon the rates of motor carriers or of water carriers than the motor carriers and water carriers wanted them to have. If the railroads raised their rates and the motor carriers felt that they could obtain higher rates, they probably filed tariffs.

Mr. President, there is nothing in any part of the bill relating to any increase in railroad rates, or which would permit any increase in rates, and it would not have any effect on rates except possibly the natural competitive business effect which would result under any circumstances, whether this provision goes in the bill or stays out. All we are trying to do is to hold any future increase in railroad rates to a minimum for the benefit of the shippers, and arrange a plan whereby the shippers' increased rates may be distributed among the railroads which are in the greatest need of help.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to make an observation to the very learned Senator from Kansas. Yesterday and today the very distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], who is conversant with the bill in its every provision, spoke at length of the coordination of the three great forms of transportation—water, rail, and road. I believe in such coordination. I was impressed by the able argument of the Senator. But coordination is omitted from the proposed amendment, and the increased rates are applied only to railroad carriers. If coordination applicable to rail carriers would carry out the general philosophy of the bill, why should it not apply to the other carriers? If it is applied to rail carriers, will it not have the effect of shifting a substantial portion of the traffic from the railroads to water transportation and to motor vehicles?

Mr. REED. That has been a disputed question in every general rate case that has been tried. The Interstate Commerce Commission in its decision has sought to ascertain whether or not an increase in rates would have an effect upon the movement of traffic.

Mr. McNARY. I am trying to clarify the matter in my own mind by getting the frank and candid judgment of the able Senator from Kansas. What does he think?

Mr. REED. About what?

Mr. McNARY. About increase of rates having a tendency to shift traffic from one system of transportation to another, and is that the Senator's excuse for not using the coordinated system clear through the bill?

Mr. REED. I do not want the record to rest under the intimation of the Senator from Oregon that there is any relation between the amendment, which has only a special purpose in view, and a national system of transportation. I said in the beginning that of the competitive traffic in this country, excluding the Great Lakes and the pipe lines, 66 percent was handled by the railroads and about 10 percent by motor carrier and inland waterways. Therefore, the 66 percent is important. It is so important that there is no person in this country who is not interested in it.

The time may come when the railroads will seek a further increase in rates. I do not know that they will. They tell me they have no present intention of doing so. But if the railroads were granted a further increase in rates, and only in that event, would the provision in question have any effect at all. The question which the Senator from Oregon asks could be asked with equal force and pertinency without the provision in question being in the bill. It has no pertinency to this section at all.

I desire to proceed to the New England Divisions case, which presents a situation analagous to the present situation. Mr. Justice Brandeis, in writing the opinion in that case, made the following statement, which could be made with equal pertinency in the present situation:

The credit of the carriers, as a whole, had been seriously impaired. To preserve for the Nation substantially the whole transportation system was deemed important. By many railroads funds were needed, not only for improvement and expansion of facilities, but for adequate maintenance. On some, continued operation would be impossible, unless additional revenues were procured. A general rate increase alone would not meet the situation. There was a limit to what the traffic would bear.

I am still quoting from the opinion by Mr. Justice Brandeis:

Moreover, it was not clear that the people would tolerate greatly increased rates (although no higher than necessary to produce the required revenues of weak lines) if thereby prosperous competitors earned an unreasonably large return upon the value of their properties. The existence of the varying needs of the several lines and of their widely varying earning power was fully realized. It was necessary to avoid unduly burdensome rate increases and yet secure revenues adequate to satisfy the needs of the weak carriers.

And I particularly call attention to the following portion of the opinion and to remind the Senate that the case in question had to do with New England:

A further large increase in rates local to New England wou'd doubtless have provoked more serious competition from auto trucks and water carriers. For hauls are short and the ocean is near. Instead of erecting New England into a separate rate group, the Commission placed it, with the other two subdivisions of Official Classification Territory, into the eastern group, and ordered that freight rates in that group be raised 40 percent.

I read finally from the New England Divisions case, which is one of the leading cases upon a question of this kind:

It may be just to give the prosperous carrier a smaller proportion of the increased rate than of the original rate. Whether the rate is reasonable may depend largely upon the disposition which is to be made of the revenues derived therefrom.

Lest some Senator should argue that we are depriving a strong and prosperous railroad of something that belongs to it, let me say that the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brandeis, said:

It is not true, as argued, that the order compels the strong railroads to support the weak. No part of the revenues needed by the New England line is paid by the western carriers. All is paid by the community pursuant to the single rate increase ordered.

I think that is enough for the New England Divisions case, although I had desired to speak a little further about it.

I now wish to refer to the case in which Mr. Chief Justice Taft read the opinion. That is the case of Dayton-Goose Creek Railway Co. against United States, found in Two Hundred and Sixty-third United States Reports, at page 456. The syllabus in that case, paragraph d, reads:

d. A railroad, however strong financially, economical in facilities, or favorably situated as to traffic, is not entitled as of constitutional right to more than a fair, net operating income upon the value of its properties devoted to transportation.

In that connection I wish to read a sentence by former Chief Justice Taft:

Thus the question of the minimum of a fair percentage on value is shown to vary with the circumstances.

At the time of my service on the Kansas State Commission we always used 7 percent as a fair return on public-utility property. I doubt if under present conditions anyone would maintain that 7 percent is necessary in order to avoid confiscation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said his rule was 7 percent. Was that the only factor?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; but when we determined a fair return which we permitted a public-utility company to earn, as nearly as we could we fixed it at 7 percent. There is no absolute way to determine whether it should be 7, $7\frac{1}{2}$, 8, 6, or 61/4.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course the return is not always the only factor, because the value of the service, the cost of the service, and things of that kind, affect the rate, do they not? Seven percent was the maximum. Rates would not be fixed which would return more than 7 percent?

Mr. REED. That was about the general average. Some commissions allowed 8 percent. Some allowed 6 percent. Judgment varies upon questions of that kind, and variable factors enter into the judgment.

I wish to read from the language of former Chief Justice Taft, and then I shall conclude:

Uniform rates enjoined for all shippers will tend to divide the Uniform rates enjoined for all shippers will tell to discuss the business in proper proportion, so that, when the burden is great, business in proper proportion, will be used to its capacity. If the the railroad of each carrier will be used to its capacity. If the weaker roads were permitted to charge higher rates than their competitors, the business would seek the stronger roads with the lower rates, and congestion would follow. The directions given to the Commission in fixing uniform rates will tend to put them on a scale enabling the railroad of average efficiency among all the carriers of the section to earn the prescribed maximum return. Those who earn more must hold one-half of the excess primarily to preserve their sound economic condition and avoid wasteful expenditures and unwise dividends.

Mr. President, I do not see how any impression could be created that the bill seeks to raise rates. All it seeks to do is to apply a principle which has been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which actually has been used in the past, and which has been supported and confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in two separate decisions, one affecting the divisions of the New England railroads and the other involving the general principle of taking excess earnings away from strong carriers for the benefit of weak carriers.

I wish the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] were present in the Chamber, for I should say to him that we are not seeking to reenact the recapture provision. That was found to be unworkable and was repealed. We are seeking to establish a rule which is workable. I do not mean to say that the problem is simple or easy. The language was drafted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I was in conference with the Commission on several occasions, and we wrote into the bill the provision that the Commission must take into consideration these factors:

The efficiency with which carriers concerned are operated; the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation; and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers.

That language is found on page 50.

We do not seek to condone-in fact, we condemn-inefficiency. We do not seek to preserve railroads which are unnecessary. We seek to preserve railroads in the order of their importance to the public interest.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. Suppose a railroad has an excessive capitalization, is very improvident in borrowing money, and owes a great debt; would the debt be considered as part of the operating expenses?

Mr. REED. No; not if I were a member of the Commission. I have a very high respect for the intelligence of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BYRD. Of course, interest on a debt is a part of expenses.

Mr. REED. My own opinion, for whatever it may be worth-and it does not bind the Interstate Commerce Commission—is that the Interstate Commerce Commission would use the rate-making value of the property as a basis upon which to proceed, and not the capitalization or the bonded indebtedness.

Mr. BYRD. Is the language in the bill, "a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation," based upon the valuation placed upon the property by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. REED. Yes; for rate-making purposes.

Mr. BYRD. Is that the same language that is in the present law with respect to the rates now in effect?

Mr. REED. I think it is; but I could not be certain without making a comparison.

Mr. BYRD. I understand the bill sets up a different standard.

Mr. REED. No: we did not intend to do so. I discussed this language at length with the Commission. The problem is not simple. I do not wish to leave the impression that it is. We are struggling with a difficult problem, and we are trying to find the best solution we can for it.

Mr. BYRD. I am unable to follow the Senator from Kansas on this point. He admits that the recapture clause was unworkable.

Mr. REED. Not unconstitutional, but unworkable.

Mr. BYRD. Unworkable. Mr. REED. That is correct.

The recapture clause provided that 50 percent Mr. BYRD. of the earnings should be recaptured. The bill provides that 100 percent of the increased rates which may be allowed may be recaptured. Why is such a provision workable when the old law was not workable?

Mr. REED. Many factors in the old section 15a, which included the recapture clause, are not in the present law or in the bill. Much of the old debris has been cleared away. The Interstate Commerce Commission thinks the provision in the bill is workable. It does not think it is simple. It says frankly that its administration would be a hard job; but it is the only way out that the Interstate Commerce Commission thinks would be fair to the public and would limit any future rate increases to the amount required by the needs of the carriers as a whole in the public interest.

Mr. BYRD. If it is fair and just to pool the earnings from increased rates, why would it not be fair and just to pool all the earnings of railroads, not only such increases as they may receive in rates but all the present earnings, and to take money away from the well-managed, well-to-do roads and give it to the inefficient, poorly managed roads?

Mr. REED. As will be found from an examination of the letter of the Commission, the Commission went considerably further in its recommendation to the House than our committee has gone in this amendment. All we did was to look to future increases.

Mr. BYRD. Is not that action a recognition of a principle which could later be carried out, that all earnings should be pooled, thereby discrediting the debt structure of the railroads which are now making profitable earnings, and whose bonds are held by insurance companies, banks, and others? other words, what is the difference in principle between the proposal in the bill and the pooling of all the earnings?

Mr. REED. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia whether or not he is a lawyer? I know he was formerly Governor of his State.

Mr. BYRD. No; I am not a lawyer. Mr. REED. The Senator is a newspaperman, is he not?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. REED. So am I. I am not a lawyer. So, as one newspaperman to another, I shall try to make a distinction for the Senator which I am afraid my lawyer friends might frown upon. There is a difference between existing earnings, in which a carrier might establish a property right, and an increase in earnings granted by a public regulatory body. I cannot give the exact reference, but I think the Supreme Court has said in terms that no railroad has a property right in an increase of earnings authorized or ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission. If I have made the distinction clear, that is about the best statement I can make as a layman.

Mr. BYRD. However, as a matter of fairness and justice, the principle is the same. If it is right to take a portion of an increase in rates from the railroads, it is likewise right to take, for the purpose of common pooling, the present earnings of a railroad; and it is right to take money from one railroad which perhaps makes more from a general schedule of rates than other railroads in other sections. The principle is the same.

Mr. REED. The railroad themselves had the recapture provision in section 15 (a) written into the 1920 act, but the provision was found to be unworkable. In 1931 the railroads suggested, and the Interstate Commerce Commission set up, a pool of the increased earnings, but they were only to be loaned to the weaker railroads and had to be repaid. In the last general rate increase the Commission had to allow an increase in coal rates to the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Norfolk & Western, the Virginian, even though the Commission said those roads were making a fair return. It shocked the conscience to increase the rates of those carriers that were already making a legal return, but under the system of competitive rate making, whereby competitive rates of railroads are kept on the same level, there was no escape from it. The provision in this bill will permit an escape from the dilemma in which the Commission found itself and as a result of which it issued the order which shocked the conscience of every man familiar with the order, which, taken by itself, assured increased rates to railroads that did not need them. I was trying to use the New England Divisions case and the statement of Chief Justice Taft in the Dayton-Goose Creek Railway Co. case to show that the Supreme Court has twice approved the legality of what has been written into this bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, of course the question whether or not particular railroads need an increase may be a question of the efficiency of management or the condition of their debt structure whereby they do not have interest and other charges to pay. Under this amendment, as the Senator understands it, suppose there was a weak road somewhere, very inefficiently managed and not economically sound in the sense that it had a territory tributary to it that justified its existence, could not the earnings of more prosperous roads be taken to sustain indefinitely and keep in operation the uneconomic and weak road?

Mr. REED. My own opinion is that there are between 15,000 and 25,000 miles of railroad in the United States that have no economic justification; that are going to have to be abandoned. I cannot conceive that a sensible regulatory body would ever take any part of the earnings of other roads under this provision and apply it to a situation of that kind.

Mr. BYRD. Of course, the Senator admits that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to do it under his amendment?

Mr. REED. No; not under the phraseology of the provision.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator point out to me some language in his amendment that prohibits such action on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. REED. I do not know how to make the provision any tighter. May I suggest to the Senator that I was delegated by the committee to hold conferences with the Interstate Commerce Commission on a number of matters including this one. The first rule the Interstate Commerce Commissioners suggested to me as one which in their opinion would meet the situation was that the distribution should be just and reasonable. I said, "I am just a layman; but I do not think you can get by the courts with a proposition of that kind. What the Congress ought to do is to write into the law a rule by which the Commission must be governed." So we wrote this provision into the bill, and I may suggest to the Senator from Virginia that this language—giving consideration, among other things, to the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railroad property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such character—is identical, so far as my recollection goes, with the language of the law which the Supreme Court upheld in the New England Divisions case. In other words, we lay down here a rule that binds the Commission.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator contend that under this amendment the Interstate Commerce Commission could not use the increased revenue of the roads for the purpose of keeping in operation an uneconomic road?

Mr. REED. That would be my position.

Mr. BYRD. There is nothing in the language that prohibits it. If there is, I should like to have the Senator point it out to me.

Mr. REED. I suggest that the Senator consider the words, "the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers" and "the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated."

I do not know how much stronger we could have made the wording.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator has made a very able argument, and before he takes his seat I should like to ask him another question. A little while ago I asked why he did not include water transportation and likewise motor transportation in the general pooling, in view of the fact that this is a general transportation bill? I would greatly appreciate it if the Senator would answer that question.

Mr. REED. We have three reasonably distinct phases of transportation. The philosophy of this bill is to bring about an equality of regulation as between those three phases of transportation. We do not propose to merge them; we do not propose to let one obtain control over the other. All we are trying to do is to secure equality of regulation and to stabilize the regulation of transportation in the United States. I think it would be highly improper to undertake to pool earnings of water carriers and motor carriers or motor carriers and railroads, or railroads and water carriers.

Mr. BYRD. I do not mean to put the earnings of them all in one pool. Does the bill provide for putting water carriers' earnings in one pool, the earnings of truck carriers in another pool, and the earnings of railroad carriers in another?

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, I tried in the beginning to set out, as clearly as I know how to set it out in the English language, that of 76 percent of transportation, aside from the Great Lakes and the pipe lines, 56 percent is handled by the railroads. It is most important to the public interest that the railroad situation be preserved and something done for their benefit, and particularly to distribute any future increases in rates for the benefit of the weak carriers and not to pool the earnings of the different branches of transportation. The committee has never had that in mind.

Mr. TRUMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Austin in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks on Senate bill 2009. I shall take only a very few minutes.

I am familiar with this proposed legislation. I know its history from the beginning.

In 1935 the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] secured the adoption by the Senate of a resolution, known as Senate Resolution 71, providing for an investigation of the financial structure of the railroads. The committee which made the investigation under the resolution had its first meeting in December 1935 and continued in operation for about two and a half years. Early in 1938 the President asked a committee to call at the White House and discuss the situation of the railroads. The Senator from Montana and I were on the committee. We made two trips to the White House for the purpose of that discussion. Three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission then were appointed to outline a plan, which they did, and the plan was sent to the Senate by the President. No action was taken on the plan. Then last fall a Committee of Six was appointed by the President for the same purpose. They presented a report and outlined a program; and it was finally decided by the Interstate Commerce Committee that a transportation policy should be inaugurated by the Government of the United States.

This bill is a preliminary effort to inaugurate a transportation policy for the country. I was chairman of the subcommittee which worked for two and a half years on a bill to put air transportation under governmental control. It was first intended to place air transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission. We met serious objection to that plan in the Senate and in the House, and finally created the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which has been in operation for, as I recall, about 9 months. The only reason why air transportation was not included in this general transportation policy bill was that the Civil Aeronautics Authority has recently been established and is just beginning to function as it should function, and it was not thought proper at this time to transfer control of air transportation to the Interstate Commerce Commission, although I think eventually that is what should happen.

The only serious objection to this bill has been by the water carriers. The serious objection is made by those who do not want regulation at all. The Government is committed to a policy of regulation, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] correctly stated yesterday. If we are going to regulate one method of transportation all ought to be treated

Mr. Eastman, chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, in a House committee document of the Seventysixth Congress, first session, made this statement:

The Commission believes that the recommendation of the committee of three in regard to this matter-

That is, water transportation-is basically sound, but that it is not, as a practical matter, important to change the present regulatory plan with respect to air carriers and gas-pipe lines. The latter have no closer relation to the general transportation problem than have electric power transmission lines, and can well be left to the regulation of the Federal Power Commission. Air carriers compete with other types of carriers in long distance passenger transportation and in the carriers of mail and express but such competition is of lesser course. riage of mail and express, but such competition is of lesser consequence. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is newly created, and we now see no sufficient reason for disturbing it.

The situation is otherwise as to water carriers. Their competiwith railroads is in general keen and close. Many of them participate freely with railroads in joint rates, and also with motor carriers, which they often use for auxiliary or supplemental service. We have frequent occasion to consider important cases, particularly with respect to relief for the railroads from the long-and-short-haul rule—

About which a great deal has been said on the floor of the Senate-

Where competition between rail and water lines is the crucial factor. This is as true of the intercoastal and coastwise water as of those on the inland waterways. Present regulation of the water carriers, as has been seen, is incomplete and divided. We believe it should be comprehensive and concentrated in a single Impartiality in the regulation of different types of carriers is promoted by giving a single agency comparable juridiction and responsibility for each type. Under H. R. 2531, the responsibility of this Commission would be primarily and chiefly for railroads and motor carriers, but it would have superseding authority to fix minimum rates (the vital factor in competition) for carriers for whom other governmental bodies would continue to have primary responsibility. Such a situation would invite doubts as to impartiality. Divided or superimposed jurisdiction also duplicates effort and is likely to engender confusion and ill will.

I think that is as plain a statement of the situation as could be made.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. The letter from which the Senator is reading is the letter from Commissioner Eastman to Chairman LEA of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. In that letter Mr. Eastman also says, I believe, that the so-called bulk carriers in competition with Canadian carriers on the Great Lakes could be left out of regulation without harm.

Mr. TRUMAN. We have made every effort to leave them out, and it is the intention of the committee to leave them out.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that I am not satisfied that they are out; and I hope we can agree upon an amendment which will satisfy the Senators from the Great Lakes States that those carriers are undoubtedly out.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think that is a mere matter of wording, and I think we can get together on it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, is there no doubt in the Senator's mind about the purpose to exclude those carriers?

Mr. TRUMAN. None whatever.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then we have the joint testimony of the two authors of the bill and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]; yet we have a joint refusal specifically to exempt the bulk carriers on the Great Lakes. How does the Senator reconcile the two positions?

Mr. TRUMAN. I think we already have specifically exempted them. That is the intention of the wording of the bill, and we are not refusing specifically to exempt them at The committee is considering the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown]; and when individual amendments come up for consideration I think we can arrive at an agreement which will be entirely satisfactory to both the Senators from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator from Missouri willing to exempt them specifically?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am certainly willing to exempt them, but I do not want to have the common carriers on the Lakes exempted and not have the common carriers on the other waterways exempted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree to that.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the bill vest in the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over the water carriers along the Atlantic seaboard, for example, and the Gulf coast of the United States?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes. Mr. PEPPER. They would not be affected?

Mr. TRUMAN. They would be under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. PEPPER. That is, water carriage, for example, from Fort Pierce, Fla., to New York City by coastwise vessels would be within the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct. I do not think the Senator ought to call it the Railroad Commission.

Mr. PEPPER. I mean the Interstate Commerce Com-

Mr. TRUMAN. The Interstate Commerce Commission; it is not intended to be a railroad commission. Mr. PEPPER. In my State it happens to be called the Railroad Commission, and I lapsed into that error.

We have a situation at Fort Pierce, Fla., where waterway transportation was established for the carriage of citrus fruit by the installation of a precooling plant there and by the deepening of the harbor. What actually came about was that as soon as the water transportation became possible 3 days a week the freight rates were reduced to the level of the water rates. They were the 3 days of the week when the boats sailed. On the 3 days of the week when the boats did not sail the rail rates went back to the normal base. I wonder how the question of convenience and necessity would be applied by the Commission in such a case as that.

Mr. TRUMAN. Does not the Senator think any commission possessing a reasonable amount of common sense would remedy a situation like that if they had control over both methods of transportation?

Mr. PEPPER. When we come to judge the question of convenience and necessity, does it mean that there is need for water-transportation service, taking into consideration the freight rate as it then exists, or does it mean that if the freight rate were lowered there would not be a need for water transportation?

Mr. TRUMAN. When water transportation is taken into consideration by an unbiased and fair-minded commission it has nothing whatever to do with railroad rates or railroad

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to respond to the Senator from Florida, we have specifically inserted three provisions which definitely say to the Commission, with reference to rate making, and with reference to preferences, that they shall consider water transportation separate and distinct in and of itself, and that the railroads shall not be taken into consideration when they are considering the problem of water transportation. When they came to consider whether or not a certificate of convenience and necessity was needed with reference to water transportation, they would look at it purely from the standpoint of water transportation, and not with reference to the railroads.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for that very fine statement. As I understand, a certificate of convenience and necessity will be exacted only of those who propose to become public carriers by water.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. I suppose there is a "grandfather" clause protecting those who are already water carriers.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the effective date of the "grandfather" clause?

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot give it offhand. We expect to offer an amendment so as to take care of the rates which are in effect when the transfer takes place. There is perhaps a little loophole, to which the water carriers have called our attention, and we propose to rectify that with an amendment from the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Having had some experience with the Motor Carrier Act of 1935, and having seen some of the injustices arising from relating the "grandfather" clause back to a time prior to the effective date of the act, I hope it will be the judgment of the committee to make the effective date of the act the effective date of the "grandfather" clause, whatever that may be.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is what is provided in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what is provided in the bill; and the provisions are entirely satisfactory to the water carriers who have appeared before the committee.

Mr. PEPPER. One other question, if I may. The bill will not apply to any cooperative, or any agricultural agency, or to any private individual, person, firm, or corporation who or which desires to transport over a waterway its own goods in its own vessels?

Mr. TRUMAN. Not at all. Mr. PEPPER. When they are not engaged as carriers for hire or as common carriers?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct; a privately owned carrier does not come under the terms of the bill at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the Senator whether there is anything in the bill-and I cannot find anything-which would permit a railroad monopoly of truck transportation?

Mr. TRUMAN. It is specifically forbidden in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have received a telegram from the labor relations division of the Pennsylvania Truck Association referring to amendment of paragraph 2, section 49.

Mr. TRUMAN. They want the bill to remain as it is. They are afraid the express companies will try to have the bill amended so as to give the express companies the truck business, but the bill as written is entirely satisfactory to the trucking interests.

I will read the provision about the railroads owning trucks:

Provided, however, That in the case of application for unification of motor carriers by a carrier by railroad, or any person which is controlled by such a carrier or affiliated therewith within the meaning of paragraph (6) of this section, the Commission shall not enter an order approving the unification unless it finds that the transaction proposed will promote the public interest by enabling such carrier by railroad to use service by motor vehicle to public advantage in its operations and will not unduly restrain corportition. tage in its operations and will not unduly restrain competition.

Mr. DAVIS. I have read the paragraph. I wanted the RECORD to show that I propounded this particular question to the Senator from Missouri, one of the coauthors of the bill, in order that I might have an expression from him about it.

Mr. TRUMAN. Very well; that is the answer. Every effort is being made by the Senator from Montana as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to inaugurate a transportation policy in the United States. We have not a transportation policy; we never have had a transportation policy, any more than we had a military policy until 1920. It is absolutely essential to the welfare of the country that we have a transportation policy. Transportation and communication are what make this country great, and it is absolutely essential that a preliminary study be made for that purpose.

The pending bill is the preliminary bill, the first bill in a proposed series of bills which will inaugurate, we think, a transportation policy which will be for the welfare and benefit of the country.

There is no way in the world to legislate traffic onto the railroads or onto ships or trucks. They are all in financially bad condition, and that can only be remedied by an increased amount of transportation. Neither the Committee on Interstate Commerce, nor the Senate, nor the House, nor the whole legislative machinery of the United States, can create traffic for the railroads.

We are hoping that if the railroads and busses and trucks and the waterways and airways are put on an equal basis, some of the evils which now exist will be eliminated.

The committee has been working on this problem for two years and a half. We have had day and night sessions on the pending bill. We have listened to everyone who desired to be heard. We have tried to please everyone we possibly could. It is not possible to please all. There are provisions in the bill which the railroads do not like but which the committee think are in the public interest. There are provisions the bus and truck interests do not like but which the committee thinks will be in the public interest; and that is true of the regulation of waterways.

We believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission will administer the proposed law fairly and justly, and that after it is in operation none of those who come under it will want to be taken from under its jurisdiction.

A few years ago, when we were working on the bus and truck legislation, all the bus and truck interests of the country, by every means of propaganda possible, said that the Interstate Commerce Commission would regulate them in the interest of the railroads. Now the railroads are saying that they are being regulated in the interest of the busses and trucks. I hope they will both say that they are being regulated in the interest of the waterways, if this bill shall be enacted: then we will be sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission is fair-minded.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it particularly important that the debate upon the bill shall disclose, by the utterances of the chairman and the active members of the committee, that there is no intention, by the passage of the bill, to minimize the importance or the responsibility to the country of the other types of transportation besides the railroads; so that there will not be even an implication that will go to the Interstate Commerce Commission that Congress has reached the conclusion that it wants to squeeze out or to minimize, or, certainly, to destroy, water transportation or motor-vehicle transportation. I am sure it is the opinion of the committee that those two means of transportation have grown up in fulfillment of a transportation demand; that they have filled and are filling a very meritorious economic service; and that the only thing the Congress has in mind is that there may be a body which will have authority to correlate and coordinate the activities of all these forms of transportation, so that each one of them shall render the best possible service to the country and serve in the sphere most appropriate for it.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is specifically what is proposed to be done under the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I may say to the Senator from Florida that he has expressed better than the chairman of the committee himself could, the views of the chairman and the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Yesterday I called the Senate's attention to the fact that when Congress passed the Transportation Act of 1920 Congress itself practically said to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "You must see that the railroads get sufficient revenue to pay them a certain interest rate upon their investment." That was the declaration, that was the policy announced by the Congress, and Congress told the Interstate Commerce Commission that it was their duty to see that that policy was effectuated.

In the pending bill we say to the Commission, "Your duty is not only to the railroads, but you owe the same duty to water transportation and to bus and truck transportation that you owe to the railroads."

In my judgment, the Commission should not be blamed for much that was done by the railroads under the act of 1920, but the blame should be placed upon the Congress itself for setting up the policy it provided.

The argument has been made that the pending bill will serve to bring in more money to the railroads. I do not think the bill, if enacted, will have that effect. I do not think it will result in raising railroad rates. If I thought it would I should not be in favor of it.

What the railroads of the United States need most is more business, and I think, and I have repeatedly said, that the railroads must reduce rates in order to get more traffic. I hope the railroads will get out of their heads the idea that they must constantly raise rates in order to save themselves. I think the reverse is true.

The railroad industry is a mass-production industry, and in order for any mass-production industry to succeed it must have mass consumption. It cannot succeed without mass consumption. The way to get mass consumption is to reduce rates and thus create more traffic, induce more people to travel from one end of the country to the other, induce people to ship goods from one end of the country to another, from Florida to New York, from California to Montana. But to accomplish that the railroads must establish chapper rates. It is the policy of the committee to endeavor to bring about a condition which will permit the railroads to reduce their rates and still maintain a sound financial structure.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, the reason the discussion always gets back to the railroads is that the railroads handle about 67 percent of all the traffic. In 1926 they handled 75 percent of all the traffic. The present condition of the railroads is due to a great many things which are not necessary to be considered at this time. The railroads are absolutely essential to the welfare of the country, and they should not be discriminated against any more than any other method of transportation should be discriminated against. The object of the pending bill is to try to put all methods of transportation on an equal basis. If it will not do that we shall have failed in our effort.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I really meant to say when I spoke a moment ago, if the Senator will further yield, that when the Senator referred to the various means of transportation being equal—

Mr. TRUMAN. Equal before the law.

Mr. PEPPER. If that is what the Senator meant by the expression he used, very well.

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; that is exactly what it means.

Mr. PEPPER. They are not exactly in the same category, and they do not render the same service.

Mr. TRUMAN. We have argued that question half a dozen times, and we have pointed out that the specific provisions of the bill will authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate each method of transportation according to its inherent qualities. I think that matter has been gone into very thoroughly.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interruption?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I was originally as much troubled as is the Senator from Florida by the thought of giving to a single commission regulatory powers over all the forms of transportation which the country enjoys. Originally I entertained the notion that, having these competitive means of transportation, if we were to preserve them as competitive systems, there was logic in having a separate regulatory body for each one of them, so that such regulatory body might be the protector and in a sense, the advocate of the particular mode of transportation within its jurisdiction. But I could not resist coming to the ultimate conclusion that that would result in wasteful and destructive competitive conditions, and that if we were to have a coordinated system of transportation, an ordered system of transportation throughout the United States, giving to our people the fullest benefits from these different modes of transportation, ultimately we would have to set up a single authority over them, and that that authority would have not only the obligation but the power to make these different systems complementary to each other, and give us in the Nation as a whole what I may call a rounded and coordinated and efficient system of transportation.

Water carriers in my section of the country have been disturbed by the proposed legislation. Some of them are rather resentful that I am supporting it, but I have reached the conclusion that it is in the public interest that all these modes of transportation should be related one to the other, and coordinated into an ordered system of transportation for all our people.

I originally was troubled by the same questions that are now in the mind of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator from Maine for his remarks.

I wish to read again the sentence I read from Mr. Eastman's letter:

Divided or superimposed jurisdiction also duplicates effort and is likely to engender confusion and ill will.

We all know that if two bureaus are in the same executive department, one sometimes, through the head of the department, can get them to cooperate, but if they are in different executive departments and under different executive heads, even the President himself sometimes cannot get them to cooperate. If we are going to have a transportation system and a transportation policy for the country, the regulation must be centered in one board in which the country has confidence. I believe the country and the Senate have confidence in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission will make an honest effort to regulate all the methods of transportation in the public interest.

For the information of the Senate I wish to present some data with respect to what has been happening in the transportation industry. The total transportation bill for 1936 was $6,774,000,000. The steam railroads received $4,255,000,-000 of that income.

Transportation has been changing radically in the last 10 or 15 years. In 1926 the railroads hauled 89 percent of the livestock to the central markets. In 1937 the railroads hauled only 47 percent of the livestock to the central markets. The reason for that reduction is that truck transportation gave the service which those owning the livestock wanted. What we wish to see is every method of transportation used in the public interest and for the public welfare and benefit.

I have before me a small book, a copy of which I have handed to all Senators on the floor. It is entitled "What Shall We Do About the Railroads?" It contains 73 pages. It is a most excellent treatise on the present condition of the railroads and on transportation in general. I hope every Senator will read it.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks chapter 11, being the conclusion, because it sets out more fully than I can set it out in a speech exactly what the transportation system of the country actually needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHAPTER 11-CONCLUSION

Generalization is hazardous, but in conclusion, the situation may be briefly summarized as follows: The railroad "problem" of today exists (a) because of the failure of the railroads to adjust themselves to the new transportation era in which we are living, and (b) because of a corresponding lag in the development of public policy as respects the industry. The matter should not be allowed to drift further, either by the railroads or the Government.

Because of the predominant national interest, the following steps are suggested on the part of the National Government:

1. A centering of executive functions, now distributed among at least seven different Government departments and agencies, in a single head to have cabinet rank like the English Minister of Transportation:

Transportation;

2. A reorganized Interstate Commerce Commission, continuing as an independent agency responsible to Congress, and functioning quasi-judicially; and

3. A special constitutional court, with provision for appeal direct to the United States Supreme Court, to have, among other things, original jurisdiction in railroad bankruptcles and receiverships but with power in its discretion to impose upon an appropriate district court duties in connection with the actual operation of properties in bankruptcy or receivership. tual operation of properties in bankruptcy or receivership.

The above recognizes:
(a) The need for a coordination of governmental policy over transportation in the widest sense of the term, to the extent of the national power over interstate commerce;

(b) In a democratic government, the necessity for cabinet responsibility, with due regard for the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers between the executive, legislative, and judi-(c) The constitutional limitations imposed by the Federal

(c) The constitutional limitations imposed by the Federal courts upon the administrative process, which render the final adjudication by an administrative agency of private property rights, a matter of such complexity and difficulty, as to justify the creation, for this purpose, of a constitutional court composed of judges, chosen for their proven qualifications and special training in this field of law.

Because the present exigencies of the railroads are partly due to factors which will continue to operate to their detriment over the long term, new tools of government, need to be devised to keep abreast of the changes which have occurred in the last 20 years in the industry of transportation considered in its widest sense. In other countries where the same problem exists, solutions are being found which are alien to our governmental institutions. The arrangement herein suggested is adapted to preserve the freest opportunity for the exercise of the principles of a self-governing nation. Among its advantages would be the following:

I. An executive agency to discharge executive functions and determine executive policy, competent to promote the development of a national transportation policy, based upon a realization of the public's interest in the maintenance of the most efficient and economical agencies of transportation, capable of financing themeconomical agencies of transportation, capable of financing themselves privately, to the extent necessary to provide needed modernization of service.

zation of service.

II. The retention of the traditional judicial type of administrative agency to hear complaints and function quasi-legislatively and quasi-judicially with respect to such matters as rates, services, and capitalizations. It is in fields such as these that the prestige of the Interstate Commerce Commission as an expert body dispensing impartial, disinterested administrative justice has been established. There is a continuing need for a commission of this sort; but, because of the quasi-judicial nature of its duties, we cannot reasonably expect it also to discharge the duties of an economic council, an advisory board, and a police force. An executive agency should be created to meet these needs.

III. The establishment of a special constitutional court to adjudicate expeditiously private rights of baffling magnitude and complexity. Because of the essential differences between the legal approach and that of an administrative agency, such a court is needed to supplement, rather than to take over, the duties now imposed upon administrative agencies of the judicial type like the Interstate Commerce Commission. The latter are better fitted to apply concepts of public interest than is a court. Moreover, procedure before such a Commission is more flexible than in a court cedure before such a Commission is more flexible than in a court of law, since an administrative agency is not confined to the strict application of the rules of evidence. If a special court were established, the court should be empowered to refer issues to the Commission for the taking of evidence; and, conversely, the Commission should be directed to consult the court on issues of law as they arise. Reciprocity of this sort would be especially advantageous in questions involving accounting, valuation for rate making, and valuation for the purpose of a condemnation award. The establishment of such a court would tend to minimize litigation and the law's delays, since conflicting construction of law by the several Federal district courts all over the country would be eliminated, and those courts, in many cases overworked or manned by judges inexperienced in the handling of large-scale corporate reorganizations, and more particularly in the economics of transportation, would be relieved from existing strain.

The issue posed by the transportation crisis is not one of more

The issue posed by the transportation crisis is not one of more regulation versus less regulation. Rather, it is a question of working out a solution consistent with the spirit of our institutions. Whether, in a democracy such as ours, our present governmental forms would be able to survive the impact of ownership of our largest corporation type of business, and if so, the effect upon the finances of the Federal Government are open questions.

With specific reference to the railroad situation it is the purpose of this book to recommend that any legislative program that is worked out for adoption by Congress recognize the following principles:

(1) The undoubted fact that whether or not the country has a surplus of railroads, it does have, at the present time, a surplus of transportation facilities. There is not enough business to go around.

(2) The need of permitting the railroads to compete more effectively with their new competitors on the highways, on water, and in the air.

(3) The need of encouraging each form of service to go after the traffic it is best adapted to handle without penalizing any agency traine it is best adapted to handle without penalizing any agency of transportation.

(4) Relief for the railroads can be obtained by (a) permitting the abandonment of lines that no longer can pay their way, and (b) by the realization of economies through mergers, consolidations, coordinations, pooling arrangements, and the like.

(5) Because in the case of either (a) or (b) the savings will be largely at the eventue of labor adaptive provision what is produced.

largely at the expense of labor, adequate provision must be made by the Government to satisfy the quite understandable concern of the employees.

(6) To the end of reducing destructive competition, permission to railroads to engage in the transportation business generally. In this connection consideration should be given to the advantages of Federal incorporation.

(7) To the same end an overhauling of the Transportation Act, particularly those sections which unduly handicap the railroads from being effective competitors with the newer agencies of trans-

(8) To the same end, encouraging mergers and consolidations, by granting to railroads the power of eminent domain of the property or the securities of other railroads, such power to be exercised only in those cases where the Commission has found the aim is in the public interest.

the public interest.

(9) Apart from the attitude of employees (the managements as well as labor) and obsolete statutory inhibitions, a major obstacle at the present time to mergers and consolidations is the reluctance of the stronger roads to take over their overcapitalized weaker competitors on a basis which will involve assumption of the present fixed charges of the latter.

(10) The latter is one reason, among many, for continuing emphasis on the need of the realistic reorganization of overcapitalized corporate structures.

(11) To this end a simplification of reorganization procedure and the speeding up of reorganizations.

Mr. TRUMAN. I sincerely hope the Senate will act favorably on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3537) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Bloom, Mr. Luther A. Johnson, and Mr. Fish were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Cannon of Missouri, Mr. Tarver, and Mr. Lambertson were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Tarver, Mr. Houston, Mr. Rabaut, Mr. Plumley, and Mr. Engel were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

REGULATION OF MODES OF TRANSPORTATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the committee amendments be first considered. There are two or three committee amendments which probably will bring on some controversy. When we come to them I shall ask that they go over until all the noncontroversial amendments shall have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, under the heading "Declaration of policy", on page 2, line 1, after the word "transportation", to insert "subject to the provisions of this act", so as to read:

That the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, including both part I and part II thereof, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"Section 1. It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions established through collective bargaining: all to the end of insuring the development and preservation of a national transportation system adequate at all times to meet most economically and efficiently the full needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading, "Scope and application", on page 2, line 21, before the word "or", to strike out "by air", so as to read:

(a) all common carriers by railroad, by water, or by motor vehicle on the highways, pipe-line companies, express companies, and sleeping-car companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the same language, "by air", is stricken out all through the bill; is it not?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Was there any contention in the committee with regard to that matter?

Mr. WHEELER. No; there was no contention at all with reference to it.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the idea, in the first place, of inserting it in the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot say as to that. At any rate, we struck it out. There was some thought that air transportation ought to be regulated; but in view of the fact that we have set up the Civil Aeronautics Authority we struck out the language.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no fault to find with the committee for striking it out, and yet it seems to me it would have been better to leave it in. I presume discussion of the subject at this time is more or less academic, because at present there is no considerable amount of passenger or freight traffic by air. At the same time I should like to say in passing that I should not be surprised to see the time come—it may be nearer upon us than we think—when air transportation will be a very important activity of commerce.

I was a Member of the House of Representatives during the Fifty-eighth Congress, and I remember that a great debateat least I thought it was great-took place upon an appropriation bill in the House in regard to flying in the air. It was during the time of Professor Langley. There was considerable debate as to whether or not Congress should appropriate money for such purposes. I have not looked at the RECORD since. I am speaking only from memory. It is now nearly 100 years ago. [Laughter.] Some very able statesmen known all over the United States discussed the question. I think it would be well worth the time of the student to go back and read the debates which took place at that time, and see the fun that was poked at men who thought the time would ever come when we should be able to fly through the air like birds. It is exceedingly interesting to note how few friends aviation then had in the House of Representatives, and how few really thought anything could ever be done in that science. The consensus of opinion was that most of those who thought there was a future for aviation were "cracked," or were a little beside themselves in the "upper story."

Think of the wonderful developments which have taken place since, and what a great thing aviation has become. Literally billions of dollars are now being spent all throughout the world to navigate the air. I am wondering whether or not those who are now here and who will be here for many years to come will live to see the time when Congress will have to legislate for that kind of passenger and freight traffic as it now does for railroads. Perhaps all the railroads will have passed out of the picture.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that at the last session of the Congress a bill was introduced providing for the regulation of air commerce by the Interstate Commerce Commission. At that time also a bill was introduced, which subsequently was enacted, to set up a Civil Aeronautics Authority. One-tenth of 1 percent of the freight traffic of the country, and 1 percent of the passenger traffic are now carried by air. I agree with the Senator that the time may come, in the not very distant future, when both passenger and freight rates—particularly passenger rates—by air will have to be dealt with.

Mr. NORRIS. The bill before us is to regulate the transportation of passengers and freight. I believe the time will come comparatively soon when the percentage the Senator has just given with respect to freight and passenger service in the air will be increased to such an extent that it will be much more than the percentage now represented by freight and passenger service in trucks and busses. I should not be surprised to see the time come when it will be more important to regulate the traffic of passengers and freight in the air than it now is to regulate the small percentage of traffic which moves by truck or bus. In anticipation of that time, if I had my way about the matter, I believe I should leave the language in the bill just as the committee originally had it, so as to be prepared for the time when it will be necessary for us to regulate transportation in the air just as we now regulate other forms of traffic.

However, I realize that the discussion is now perhaps only academic. In passing over the subject at this time, and striking out the language referred to, it seems to me we do not realize what the future has in store, and what an important factor air commerce may become before we know it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from Nebraska, at a very appropriate time, points out the progress that aviation is making, for on yesterday we read of the completion of the first regular scheduled passage of the Atlantic Ocean by one of America's new clipper airships. The ship which traveled approximately 5,000 miles and made the crossing in an elapsed time of a little over 27 hours, is as seaworthy, perhaps, as was any one of the ships which accompanied Columbus. The United States is the first nation on earth to establish scheduled air service over the Atlantic Ocean, and, in view of the keen competition and the arrangements which are being made by the powers of Europe, it is to our lasting credit that we have a line and an agency that is engaging in this regular service.

From the time of the consideration of the item the Senator from Nebraska has brought to our attention back in the Fifty-eighth Congress up to the present session aviation has grown, until now we have lines serving Canada and Alaska in the North; we have airplane service with Central and South America and the islands of the Caribbean Sea; we are spanning both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. We have magnificent airships in which the passengers may enjoy their meals and berths may be made up for them so that they may take their rest.

It is my opinion that the sentiment voiced by the Senator from Nebraska that the day is coming when certain regulations with regard to air-service tariffs similar to those regulations now pertaining to railroads will be necessary is not merely a prophecy but will be an actual reality.

I merely wished to take advantage of this opportunity to point to the appropriateness of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska and to the magnificent flight just accomplished by America's newest clipper airship.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for his contribution. He has said what I was about to say in so much better language than I could say it, that I will content myself by merely endorsing his statement and suggesting that in these days of invention and improvement in all lines of human activity the time is rapidly coming when this little item affecting air transportation which we are striking out of this important bill will be more important, perhaps, than any of the provisions affecting other modes of transportation which we will leave in the bill.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think the Senator from Nebraska is absolutely correct. As chairman of the subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I tried for 2 years to have the regulation of air transportation placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission but we finally had to compromise and place it in the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which is supposed to have the same rules and regulations governing air transportation that the Interstate Commerce Commission has for other methods of transportation. I think the time will come, however, when every method of transportation will be under the same regulatory body, and I hope it will come

The amendment was agreed to.

(7) Nothing in this act shall apply to the transportation of property by interstate contract carriers by water which by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers by water in the same trade or route; and the Commission shall proceed immediately to determine the transportation to be so excluded and shall from time to time make such modifications of its findings as may be necessary to carry out the policy declared in section 1.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a brief observation in connection with this amendment to the particular section. This is the section which has been under substantial debate for 2 days, affecting bulk carriers on the Great Lakes. The amendment which will be proposed by my colleague the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] will subsequently be in order with respect to this paragraph. I merely wish to take advantage of this opportunity to express the hope that the distinguished chairman of the committee and his colleagues who are sustaining this legislation will hospitably consider the proposal which my colleague will submit. All in the world it proposes to do is to say textually what the authors of the bill and its proponents insist the language already means. I am unable to perceive, for the life of me, why anything should be left indefinite that can be clarified to a conclusion, because the lack of clarity simply leads to needless litigation, and the clutter of traffic litigation is already sufficient in the Interstate Commerce Commission without needlessly adding to it. I am expressing the hope that when my colleague's amendment shall be submitted those who are in charge of the bill will be consistent with their own viewpoint and make it possible at least for me to ultimately vote for the bill by making it read in text what they say it means in spirit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 9, line 7, which has been read. The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 23, to

(9) The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, shall exempt from the provisions of this act any carrier by motor vehicle if such carrier is lawfully operating solely within the borders of a single State and does not have joint through rates, fares, and charges, or other proportional rates, fares, and charges with a carrier operating in an adjoining State, unless and except insofar as the Commission finds, after notice and hearing, that the carrier is so largely engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, or both, in interstate or foreign commerce that it is affected with an important interest within the policy of this act as declared in section 1 hereof. Any exemption, as herein provided, may be revoked or modified if the Commission finds that the circumstances which gave rise to the exemption or any part thereof no longer exist. The filing of an application in good faith for an exemption as herein permitted shall exempt the applicant from the provisions of this act until the Commission has acted upon such applica-tion. It is the intent hereof that this paragraph shall be construed so as to leave carriers coming within its provisions subject to State jurisdiction and control to the greatest extent possible, not inconsistent with the policy of this act as declared in section 1 hereof.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Definitions", on page 11, line 9, before the word "means", to insert "or 'State authority'" so as to read:

The term "proportional rates" as used in this paragraph means those rates which differ from the corresponding lead water teach from the port and which amply only to traffic ing local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 22, after the word "act", to insert "(except, on and after the date this amendatory act takes effect, a common carrier by water that is not owned, leased, operated, or controlled by another carrier subject to this act, which is engaged in any form of transportation subject thereto and, except a common carrier by water in which no such other carrier has any interest direct or indirect)", so as to make the paragraph read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 15, after the word "operated", to insert "In every case of such extension, the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Commission and shall be subject to this act and all amendments thereto in all respects", so as to make the paragraph read:

In every case of such extension, the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Commission and shall be subject to this act and all amendments thereto in all respects.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 18, to insert:

(12) It shall be unlawful for any carrier by railroad or express company subject to this act to make or enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement with any corporation, company, firm, or person regardless of ownership providing for the furnishing to or on behalf of such carrier or express company of (a) protective service against heat or cold to property transported or to be transported in interstate commerce, or (b) any type of cars for the transportation of property in interstate commerce, or for any carrier by railroad or express company to continue after January 1, 1940, as a party to any such contract, agreement, or arrangement, unless and until such contract, agreement, or arrangement has been submitted to and approved by the Commission as just, reasonable, and consistent with the public interest.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee or the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] a question relative to paragraph (12) on page 25, which reads in part as follows:

(12) It shall be unlawful for any carrier by railroad or express company subject to this act to make or enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement with any corporation, company, firm, or person regardless of ownership providing for the furnishing to or on behalf of such carrier or express company of (a) protective service against heat or cold to property transported or to be transported in interstate commerce—

And so forth. Suppose that in the case of perishable fruits and vegetables part of the service is refrigeration: Would this paragraph prevent the carriers from protecting shipments of that kind?

Mr. WHEELER. No; they may protect them. This paragraph merely gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to look into the charges made to railroads by private power companies.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the company rents the equipment?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; when the company rents the equipment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment last stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Undue preference and prejudice", on page 27, line 2, after the word "point", to insert "region, district, territory"; in line 5, after the word "point", to insert "region, district, territory", so as to read:

UNDUE PREFERENCE AND PREJUDICE

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory, or any particular description of traffic to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 8, after the word "whatsoever", to insert a colon and the words:

Provided, however, That this section shall not be construed to apply to discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage by a motor common carrier or a water common carrier to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description: Provided further, That differences in the classifications, rates fares, charges, rules, regulations, and practices of a water carrier in respect of water cansportation from those in effect by a rail carrier with respect to rail transportation shall not, in and of themselves, be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage, or an unfair or destructive competitive practice within the meaning of section 1 of this act."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, referring to the amendment on page 27 just read, I do not intend to offer an amendment to it; but I did intend to do so until I talked to the chairman of the committee about the matter.

It seems to me that the words "in and of themselves," on page 27, line 17, ought to be stricken out. I think that should be done for the benefit of river transportation; but I suggested that amendment to the chairman of the committee, and he tells me that that very language was put into the bill at the request of the water carriers. It seems to me that if a case should arise out of that language it might injure the case of the water carriers. If any question does arise about the matter, the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at least, will be called to the fact that Congress put in this language for a reason exactly opposite to that for which the carriers wanted it in.

The proviso to which I refer reads as follows:

Provided further, That differences in the classifications, rates, fares, charges, rules, regulations, and practices of a water carrier in respect of water transportation from those in effect by a rail carrier with respect to rail transportation shall not, in and of themselves, be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage, or an unfair or destructive competitive practice within the meaning of section 1 of this act.

One fear, and so far as I know, practically the only fear I have had about this proposed legislation, is that which is shared by many people who want to preserve water transportation on the inland rivers of the United States and who are apprehensive that the bill will inure to their detriment. think their fear is groundless. I think the chairman of the committee was right when, in effect, he said so. I believe the water carriers have no honorable right to ask that other kinds of carriers be regulated and that they remain unregulated. Either none of them should be regulated or all of them should be regulated. But the fear of the water carriers, groundless as perhaps it is, has incited in the minds of a great many honest persons the belief that if this bill becomes a law, the Interstate Commerce Commission will impose upon water carriers conditions which will be unfair, because the Commission will forget and neglect to consider the inherent advantages which water transportation on the rivers has over rail transportation in regard to a great many different kinds of freight.

I share that fear. I do not think it is sufficient reason, however, why the water carriers should object to any kind of regulation applying to them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator believe that that fear very naturally arises from the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is essentially a railroad-minded body? And that is no reflection on the personnel of the Commission, either past or present. It seems to me to be almost inevitable that the Interstate Commerce Commission should be a railroad-minded body, because all of its experience and all of its precedents have to do with the regulation of railroads; and the fear the people have is that by subjecting water carriers to regulation by a hostile commission, great disservice may be done to the public.

So far as I am concerned, it does not make any difference to me what may be the attitude of the water carriers. The people in whom I am interested, and those in whom I know the Senator from Nebraska is interested, are the shippers in the great inland empire between the two oceans. It seems to me the fear may be very well grounded that we are turning over the regulation of the water carriers—developed in the public interest, and certainly to a great extent at public expense—to a hostile organization which would not be interested in preserving that very necessary service to the people of the inland empire of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Missouri for his very fine suggestion. However, I do not completely share with him the belief that the people have reason to entertain such a fear.

Heretofore, under the law the Interstate Commerce Commission has had to deal with railroads, not with water transportation; but I feel that our fear comes from past experience. We all know that the time was when water transportation on the Mississippi River, for instance, flourished. We have improved the river; we have improved its tributaries; and transportation ought to have increased at a tremendous rate. It did not do so, mainly, as I think, because the railroads coming in competition with that water transportation cut their rates away down below cost, and drove water transportation off the rivers. When the boats were driven off, the railroads raised their rates, and the country did not get the benefit it should have received from the use of our rivers for navigation, considering the money of the taxpayers which had been spent to improve that method of transportation.

Mr. President, I cannot understand why the Interstate Commerce Commission should be prejudiced against water transportation. If this bill shall go into effect, even as the law stands now, the railroads will not be at liberty to use their own judgment and cut their rates down to any point they may see fit to decide on. Still there rises the fear in our minds that such a thing might occur.

From my examination of the bill I do not believe that the committee could have gone further than it has gone in attempting to allay the fear. The water carriers certainly have no moral right, as I see the matter, to say to the railroads, "You must be regulated, but we must not be regulated"; in other words, giving them an opportunity to do just what the railroads did a few years ago. It would be just as bad if the water carriers people did it as though the railroads did it.

My own idea is that it is perfectly natural, it is human nature, for those engaged in one form of transportation to try to get an advantage over those engaged in another form of transportation. I do not charge it as being dishonest. As business goes, and as it is looked upon now, it is perhaps a perfectly honorable thing to do. But here is a bill in which we are attempting to be just to all kinds of transportation and to allay any fear which might arise. It seems to me that for those who are friends of water transportation the words I have read, "in and of themselves," weaken our case. I had intended to offer the amendment on the floor of the Senate until I learned that it was inserted at the instance of the very people I was trying to befriend when attempting to strike that provision out. So I shall not offer the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I inquire of the Senator from Nebraska about how long ago it was when, as he states, the railroads cut the rates in order to take traffic off the Missouri River?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not state they did it in order to take traffic off the Missouri River. I cannot answer the question as to the exact number of years.

Mr. REED. I wonder whether the Senator had in mind any time within the last 20 years.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. So far as the Missouri River is concerned, I can answer the Senator from first-hand knowledge that the railroads have made no reduction in rates on the Missouri River in the last 20 years, during which time I have had a first-hand knowledge of railroad rates, in order to affect traffic on the Missouri River.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not speaking of the Missouri River, although that is one of the rivers on which there is such transportation. At the present time, however, it is not in such an improved condition that there can be much traffic. It is now being improved. The building of Fort Peck Dam in Montana, in my judgment, is going to very greatly increase the possibility of traffic in freight on the Missouri River.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the language was inserted at the instance of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] because of his desire to protect some of his constituents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 27, line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 27, beginning in line 8, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On page 27, line 17, in the committee amendment, I move that the first four words in the line, "in and of themselves", be stricken out. I understand they were put in through a misunderstanding.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee. The next amendment was, under the heading "Filing of tariffs by common carriers", on page 28, line 7, after the word "thereunder", to insert "If no joint rate over the through route has been established, the several carriers in such through route shall file, print, and keep open to public inspection, the separately established rates, fares, and charges applied to the through transportation. The tariffs printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force, and shall also state separately all terminal charges, storage charges, icing charges, and all other charges which the Commission may require, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares, and charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee. The provisions of this section shall apply to all traffic, transportation, and facilities defined in this act", so as to read:

Sec. 7. (1) Every common carrier shall file with the Commission and print and keep open to public inspection tariffs showing all rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and practices for transportation subject to this act between points on its own route and between points on its own route and points on the route of any other such carrier, when a through route and joint rate shall have been established, and all services in connection therewith, all privileges and facilities granted or allowed and all rules, regulations, or practices affecting such rate, fare, charge, or classification or the value of the service thereunder. If no joint rate over the through route has been established, the several carriers in such through route shall file, print, and keep open to public inspection, the separately established rates, fares, and charges applied to the through transportation. The tariffs printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force, and shall also state separately all terminal charges, storage charges, icing charges, and all other charges which the Commission may require, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares, and charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee. The provisions of this section shall apply to all traffic, transportation, and facilities defined in this act. Such rates, fares, and charges shall be stated in terms of lawful money of the United States. The tariffs required by this section shall be published, filed, and posted in such form and manner, and shall contain such information as the Commission, by regulation, shall prescribe; and the Commission is authorized to reject, prior to the effective date thereof, any tariff filed with it which is not in consonance

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 18, to insert:

(5) The names of the several carriers which are parties to any joint tariff shall be specified therein, and each of the parties thereto, other than the one filing the same, shall file with the Commission such evidence of concurrence therein or acceptance thereof as may be required or approved by the Commission, and where such evidence of concurrence or acceptance is filed it shall not be necessary for the carriers filing the same to also file copies of the tariffs in which they are named as parties.

public inspection unless the Commission upon investigation determines that any contract carrier in competition with any common carrier enjoys a favorable competitive position by reason of the fact that his contract is not open for public inspection, in which event the Commission may require that such contract carrier publish, post, and keep open for public inspection, a complete and exact copy of his contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking", so as to read:

Such notice shall plainly state the change proposed to be made and the time when such change will take effect. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment beginning, on line 2, page 49, down to and including the word "carriers", on line 13, page 50, be temporarily passed over, because those are two controversial provisions which I agreed

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, should not the whole of the subdivision go over? There is a proviso, on line 13, page 50, which may have some reference to the subject matter which

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think it does; I am sure it does not. However, if it does have reference to it, we will take

Mr. McNARY. Very well. It seems to me that the language, on line 15, page 50, has relation to that which precedes it.

Mr. WHEELER. I am perfectly willing to have all the text down to the word "authorized" in line 9, page 51, go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the clerk will state the amendment in line 24, page 51.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the heading "Combinations to prevent continuous carriage of freight", on page 51, line 24, after the word "carrier", it is proposed to insert "by railroad", so as to read:

SEC. 11. It shall be unlawful for any carrier by railroad to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, and no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption made by such carrier shall prevent the carriage of freights from being and being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage, or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose, and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Commodities clause", on page 52, after line 12, to strike out:

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any carrier by railroad and, on and after January 1, 1941, it shall be unlawful for any carrier, other than a carrier by air, to transport, in commerce subject to this act, any article or commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by or under the authority of such carrier or any subsidiary, affiliate, or controlling person of such carrier, or any such article or commodity in which such carrier, subsidiary, affiliate, or controlling person has any interest, direct or indirect, legal or equitable, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary or intended for use in the conduct of the carrier business of such carrier.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any railroad company to trans-SEC. 12. of orders of the Commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon, or otherwise lawfully in effect, shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or determination by the Commission: And provided further, That tariffs proposing rates subject to the provisions of this paragraph may be filed when application is made to the Commission under the provisions hereof, and such application and tariffs shall be handled in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 29 of this part section 28 of this act.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what change the amendment will make in the long-and-short-haul clause?

Mr. WHEELER. It simply expedites the work. application is made to the Commission for the lowering of rates in order to meet competition, the rate will go into effect if there is no controversy over it, and in about 80 percent of the cases there is no controversy. If there is controversy then the Commission suspends the rate and holds a hearing.

Mr. BYRD. Does that embody the same provisions as appear in the so-called Pettengill bill?

Mr. WHEELER. No; because the long-and-short haul is to remain in the bill, and we have modified to a certain extent because there was a great deal of complaint of the long delays due to the fact that the Commission would hold a hearing upon every little application even when there was no controversy. This provision is to expedite the work and do away with the delays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment last stated.

The next amendment was, on page 192, line 9, after the word "act", to insert a period and "As used in this paragraph, in the next succeeding paragraph, and in section 19, the words 'keep' and 'kept' shall be construed to mean made, prepared, or compiled, as well as retained, and the words 'accounts, records, and memoranda' shall be construed to include all reports and copies thereof made, prepared, compiled, or retained by carriers or brokers pursuant to orders of the Commission made under any of the provisions of this act", so as to read:

(14) In case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, owner, or broker to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda on the books and in the manner prescribed by the Commission, under the provisions of section 19 of this act, or in case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, owner, broker, controlling person, affiliate, or other person to submit any accounts, books, records, memoranda, correspondence, or other documents to the Commission or any of its authorized agents or examiners for inspection or copying as required by section 19 of this act, such carrier, owner, broker, controlling person, affiliate, or other person shall forfeit to the United States not less than $100 or more than $500 for each such offense and for each and every day of the continuance of such offense, such forfeitures to be recoverable in the same manner as other forfeitures provided for in this act. As used in this paragraph, in the next succeeding paragraph, and in section 19, the words "keep" and "kept" shall be construed to mean made, prepared, or compiled, as well as retained, and the words "accounts, records, and memoranda" shall be construed to include all reports and copies thereof made, prepared, compiled, or retained by carriers or brokers pursuant to orders of the Commission made under any of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 193, line 5, after the word "thereto", to insert "or shall knowingly or willfully file with the Commission any false report or other document required to be filed by it"; in line 11, after the word "term", to strike out "not less" and insert "of not more"; and in line 12, after the word "year", to strike out "nor more than 3 years", so as to read:

(15) Any person who shall willfully make, cause to be made, or participate in the making of any false entry in any annual or other report required to be filed, or in the accounts of any book of accounts or in any record or memoranda kept by a carrier, owner, or broker, or who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, alter, or by any other means or device falsify the record of any such account, record, or memoranda, or any books, correspondence, or other documents, or who shall willfully neglect or fail to make full, true, and correct entries in such accounts, records, or memoranda of all facts and transactions appertaining to the business of the carrier, owner, or broker, or shall keep any accounts, records, or memoranda contrary to the rules, regulations, or orders of the Commission with respect thereto, or shall knowingly or willfully file with the Commission any false report or other document required to be filed by it, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 or imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 193, after line 13, to strike out:

(16) Any carrier, owner, or broker, or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make a report to the Commission, as required by this act, or to file true copies of any contract, or arrangement, under section 8, when required by the Commission, or to keep accounts, records, and memoranda in the form and manner approved or prescribed by the Commission, or shall knowingly and willfully falsify, destroy, mutilate, or alter any such report, account, record, or memorandum, or shall knowingly and willfully file any false report, account, record, or memorandum, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be subject for each offense to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000, or imprisonment in a penitentiary for a term of not exceeding 2 years, or both. As used in this paragraph, in the next succeeding paragraph, and in section 19, the words "keep" and "kept" shall be construed to mean made, prepared, or compiled, as well as retained, and the words "accounts, records, and memoranda" shall be construed to include all reports and copies thereof made, prepared, compiled, or retained by carriers or brokers pursuant to orders of the Commission made under any of the provisions of this act.

And in Lieu thereof to insert the following:

(16) Any carrier, owner, or broker, or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make and file an annual or other report with the Commission as required by this act, or to file true copies of any contract, agreement, or arrangement under section 8 when required by the Commission, or to make specific and full, true, and correct answer to any question authorized by the provisions of this act within 30 days from the time it is lawfully directed so to do, or shall deliver or relinquish possession of any freight transported by it contrary to the provisions of section 14 (1) of this act, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day it shall continue in default with respect thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 195, line 5, after the word "equipment", to strike out the comma and "and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing and kept or required to be kept by carriers, owners, or brokers" and insert "of said carrier, owner, or broker, as provided in section 19 (5) of this act", so as to read:

(17) In case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, owner, or broker to accord to the Commission or its duly authorized special agents or examiners access to, or inspection or examination of, all lands, buildings, or equipment of said carrier, owner, or broker, as provided in section 19 (5) of this act, such carrier, owner, or broker shall be liable to a forfeiture of $100 for each day during which such failure or refusal continues.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 195, line 23, after the word "of", to strike out "section" and insert "sections", so as to read:

(19) Any carrier which violates any provision of sections 33 or 34 of this act, or which falls to comply with any of the orders, rules, regulations, standards, or instructions made, prescribed, or approved thereunder shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each such violation and $100 for each and every day such violation, refusal, or neglect continues, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violations shall have been committed. It shall be the duty of such attorneys to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with them showing such violations having occurred; and it shall be the duty of the Commission to lodge with the proper United States attorneys information of any violations of sections 33 or 34 coming to its knowledge.

(20) In case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, receiver, or trustee to comply with all the requirements of section 35 of this act and in the manner prescribed by the Commission such carrier, receiver, or trustee shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each such offense and for each and every day of the continuance of such offense. (19) Any carrier which violates any provision of sections 33 or 34 every day of the continuance of such offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 197, line 6, after the word "not", to strike out "less" and insert "more", and in line 7, after the words "1 year", to strike out "not more than 3 years"; so as to read:

(21) Any person subject to the provisions of section 36 of this act or any director, officer, attorney, or agent thereof who know-ingly assents to or concurs in any issue of securities or assumpingly assents to or concurs in any issue of securities or assumption of obligation or liability forbidden by said section or any application or other disposition of securities contrary to the provisions of the Commission's order or orders in the premises, or any application not authorized by the Commission of the funds derived by the carrier or person through such sale or other disposition of such securities, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 191, and I also ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on line 13 was agreed to, in order that I may offer an amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move to amend that amendment by striking out the word "railroad", in line 13, and inserting the word "broker", and in line 14, by striking out the words "paragraph (12) of section 5 or."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly explain the object of the amendment?

Mr. WHEELER. It is merely a clarifying amendment to correct a typographical error, I am told by the experts. There is no "paragraph (12) of section 5" in the bill now.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not that involve another entire section?

Mr. WHEELER. No: it is confined to section 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee? If not, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, with reference to the amendment on page 191, line 13, to which I have just made reference, may I reserve the right to correct a statement of the Senator from Montana and myself at a later time, because I think the Senator is in error as to the amendment which he has offered to the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I may be in error, but I am relying on the experts. I will, however, be very glad to have them talk with the Senator about it, and, if I am in error, a change can be made subsequently.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 197, line 19, after the word "of", to strike out "section" and insert "sections"; on page 198, line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "section" and insert "sections"; and in line 6, after the word "than", to strike out "3 years" and insert "1 year", so as to read:

(23) Any construction, operation, or abandonment contrary to the provisions of section 37, or any operation or transfer contrary to the provisions of sections 38, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, or 47, may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission or any commission or regulating body of the State or States affected, or any party in interest; and body of the State or States affected, or any party in interest; and any carrier which, or any director, officer, receiver, operating trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such carrier or broker, who knowingly authorizes, consents to, or permits any violation of the provisions of sections 37, 38, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, or 47, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 198, after line 7, to

Any person or carrier violating the requirements of section 42 of this act, or any rule or regulation of the Commission made thereunder, shall be liable to a forfeiture of $100 for each day during which such violation continues.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 193, line 20, after the word "attorneys", to insert "at the request of the Commission and", so as to read:

(25) The forfeitures and penalties provided for in this act and recoverable in a civil suit shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States. Such suits shall be brought in the name of the United States, in the district where the defendant or one of the defendants has its principal operating office, or in any district through which any defendant carrier operates. It shall be the duty of the various United States district attorneys, at the request of the Commission and under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of such forfeitures and penalties. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 199, to in-

INVESTIGATION INTO REGIONAL RATES

SEC. 52. The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to proceed immediately, in such manner as it deems advisable in the interest of a correct ascertainment of the facts, to investigate the rates on manufactured products and raw materials between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory, and to like rates within any of such territories maintained by common carriers engaged in transportation subject to this act, for the purpose of determining whether such rates are unjust or unreasonable or unlawful in any other respect in and of them-selves or in their relation to each other, and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist: Provided, That the Commission in its discretion may confine its investigation to such manufactured products and raw materials and the rates thereon as shippers thereof may specifically request to be included in such investigation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask if there is any danger of intrastate rates being included in this amendment? I notice the phrase "or in their relation to each other."

Mr. WHEELER. This provision does not broaden the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the slightest degree. It simply says that they shall carry on an investigation into these various territorial rates.

Mr. FRAZIER. It would not affect intrastate rates at all?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understood the Senator to say that this provision conferred no new power and imposed no new obligation on the Commission. I had rather assumed that was so, except for the language appearing in the second line, which directs the Commission to proceed immediately. I take it that is a new obligation and a specific obligation.

Mr. WHEELER. What I meant to say was that that is a new obligation to proceed to investigate, but the powers of the Commission as to regulating rates are not changed at all.

Mr. WHITE. That was my impression. I merely wanted to have it confirmed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I am not certain that this amendment provides for an investigation of intraterritorial rates—that is, a shipment of goods moving from one territory or region into another territory or region. I think that ought to be included in the investigation if it is not included. I do not construe it as being included.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will read the words on lines 6 and 7, page 199, the bill says:

Between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory.

The language could not be any clearer than that, I think. Mr. MILLER. Does it include the investigation of movements of freight intraterritorially or intraregionally?

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator mean in the same territory?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Yes-

and to like rates within any of such territories.

Mr. MILLER. The point I have in mind is that I do not want the Record to be silent on what the Congress intended as to the extent of this investigation of discrimination in rates. If the amendment is all-inclusive, as the language indicates that it is all-inclusive, well and good.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that I think it is, and the experts of the Commission tell me that in their opinion it is.

It is intended to take in everything.

Mr. MILLER. I wanted that statement to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. That is the intent and purpose. If the Senator will carefully read the language on lines 6, 7, and 8, I think he will see that it clearly directs that that be done.

Mr. MILLER. I think that is true. I agree that that is the context of the language, but I did not want any question to be raised about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the chairman of the committee and the Senators from Arkansas and Alabama to the language on page 199, line 13. The investigation referred to by the Senators may be sufficiently complete; but what is the Commission to do after it gets through investigating?

The language is:

And to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist.

A rate might be entirely lawful and yet be unfair and unjust with relation to some other rate.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will yield at that point, if he will refer to section 6 of the bill, on page 27, he will find there an inhibition against unlawful rates.

Section 6, beginning in line 23, page 26, says:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, association, locality, port, port district, gateway, transit point, region, district, territory—

And so forth. The last three words have been put in today by amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. But what the Senator from Texas is trying to point out is that right now we have a certain status of rates of which we have been complaining. One area in one territory has a certain set of rates. When those rates were made they were lawful, and they continued to be lawful so far as that feature of them was concerned. Now we tell the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate them—for what purpose? For the purpose of making them reasonable and fair and just. So I think the language restricting the investigation to the question of unlawfulness ought to be liberalized.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The experts from the Commission tell me that the word "unlawful" is the broadest term that could possibly be used. If a rate is unreasonable or discriminatory, it is held by the Commission to be unlawful; so that "unlawful" is the broadest term that could be used with respect to it.

I must confess that when I read the bill I felt exactly as the Senator from Texas did, and thought the language ought to be changed to be more specific, and to include unreasonableness or discrimination; but the experts tell me that this is the better term to cover the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator is right, and I hope the experts are right.

Mr. HILL. The information I had was that the word "unlawful" was the broadest term that could be used.

If I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, having in mind, however, the fact that the question would arise about which the Senator from Texas has asked—the word "unlawful" now takes in "unjust," "unreasonable," or unlawful in any other respect, as you will find set out in line 10 of page 199—it would not change the intent and the purpose to strike out the word "unlawfulness" and insert in lieu thereof the words "unjust or unreasonable or unlawful rate"; and if there is no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee, I will offer that amendment,

Mr. WHITE and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Maine, who, I believe, was on his feet first.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it is my impression that if a rate is unjust as to amount, or if it is discriminatory as between shippers, or if it is discriminatory as between territories or sections of the country, it then becomes an unlawful rate. It seems to me that if we omit the word "unlawful" we shall have to exercise the utmost care in our enumeration of the offenses we have in mind. It seems to me that the word "unlawful" is all-comprehensive, and includes everything the proposed statute has in mind as constituting either an unjust or a discriminatory or a preferential or a prejudicial rate.

Mr. HILL. Or an unreasonable rate.

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is probably a very fine thing with which to delude our consciences; but let me suggest that to-day the status of which we are complaining involves one set of rates in one territory and another set in another territory. Every one of those rates has been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been approved by them under the law, under their discretion, under their wide authority; and those rates are lawful. They cannot be unlawful.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. There are two thoughts on that subject. One is that in section 6 the pending bill changes the law, the idea being that what is lawful today will be unlawful after the bill becomes law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator object to inserting "any unreasonableness or unlawfulness which may be found to exist"?

Mr. HILL. I have sent to the desk, and if the Senator who now has the floor will yield for that purpose I will ask to have read from the desk an amendment which inserts the words "any unjust or unreasonable or unlawful rates." I do not think it changes at all the scope of the language as now written; but if it will make the language any clearer, that is what we want to do. We desire to make it as clear as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement under which only unobjectedto committee amendments are to be considered at this time. Under that agreement the Chair would rule that this amendment would be out of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendment is agreed to by the chairman of the committee. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 199, line 13, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the word "unlawfulness" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "unjust or unreasonable or unlawful rates."

Mr. CONNALLY. That does not quite meet the objection for the reason that the Senator limits the action of the Commission to removal. A rate would not be removed without putting in a new one. If the Senator is going to use the word "rates," he ought to modify the word "removal" by using additional words.

Mr. HILL. I do not agree with the Senator at all in that narrow interpretation of the word "removal." If one rate is taken out and another is put in its place, the first rate is removed. I think the word "removal" is the word commonly and ordinarily used by the Interstate Commerce Commission in matters of this kind. Certainly that is what was shown by the testimony before our subcommittee. If we remove this book and put something in its place, the book is removed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not object to the amendment. The first book is removed, but the second book is the one I am concerned with, because that is the one we are going to operate under.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection at all to the amendment, but I very much doubt its wisdom. It proposes to insert the words "unjust or unreasonable or unlawful." That carriers to me the suggestion that the unjust and the unreasonable rates may not be unlawful rates. I think we shall be a good deal safer if we stick to the word "unlawful."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I think there is a little confusion that may very easily be dissipated. I think the Senator from Texas fails to make a distinction between the term "legal" and the term "lawful" as used in describing rates charged and collected by carriers. A legal rate is the only rate that any carrier may collect.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not agree with the Senator at all. A rate might be legal and yet be the most outrageous rate that could be applied.

Mr. REED. May I conclude, with the permission of the Senator from Texas, since he has yielded to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. REED. The only rate that a carrier may collect is the tariff rate, and that is the legal rate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. REED. That legal rate, being the only rate the carrier may collect, may be unlawful if it be unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, or prejudicial. I agree with the Senator from Maine. I suggest to the brilliant young Senator from Alabama-it being none of my business-that only in deference to him did I agree not to object to putting this language in the bill, where I do not think it belongs. I think, as stated by the Senator from Maine, that the Senator from Alabama is weakening the provision when he puts in the words "unjust or unreasonable." The term that is now in the bill is the strongest term, the broadest term, the most inclusive term that can be used.

The Senator from Texas fails to make a distinction between a legal rate and a lawful rate.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the difference between an unlawful act and an illegal act, if the Senator is going to distinguish them?

Mr. REED. I tried to state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know the Senator tried, and he will try again. Those terms are almost synonymous.

Mr. REED. The only legal rate a carrier may collect is the rate published in a tariff.

Mr. CONNALLY. What are the rates in existence now which we are trying to correct? Are they legal or illegal?

Mr. REED. They are legal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Are they lawful?

Mr. REED. They might be unlawful, depending on whether they were unreasonable or unjust or prejudicial.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are certainly lawful until they are set aside by some competent authority.

Mr. REED. I beg pardon.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the shipper has to pay them, it does not make a bit of difference, when he goes to bed at night, whether they are unlawful or illegal; he has to pay them just the same.

Mr. REED. I defer to the great wisdom of the Senator from Texas, but I still insist that in this handling and description of common-carrier rates there is a distinction between a legal rate and a lawful rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee on page 199, line 13.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Investigation of various modes of transportation", on page 199, after line 19, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the top of page 203, to strike and to report to the Congress within not more than 1 year from the effective date of this amendatory act its findings and con-clusions, together with its recommendation as to any legislation relating to either of these matters which it deems necessary or desirable in the public interest. Thereafter it shall continue to keep itself informed with respect to the said matters and shall submit reports and recommendation thereon to the Congress from time to time as circumstances in its judgment may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Saving clauses, repealing clauses, etc.", on page 203, line 20, after the word "pending", to insert "in any court or", so as to read:

SAVING CLAUSES, REPEALING CLAUSES, AND SO FORTH

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 205, line 20, after the numerals "1936", to strike out "and of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938"; on page 106, beginning in line 1, to insert "Commission by the Inland Waterways Corporation Act of June 7, 1924, as amended; and nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or diminish powers now vested in the"; and in line 4, after the name "Commission", to strike out "the Civil Aeronautics Authority", so as to read:

(5) The act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States", approved February 19, 1903, as amended; the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action relative to adjustments in the rate structure of common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and the fixing of rates and charges", approved January 30, 1925; the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, sections 18 and 19 of the Shipping Act, 1916, and any other provisions of said act, and any provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, and of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and of all other acts which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed so far as they apply to matters within the jurisdiction vested in the Commission or the Board by the provisions of this act; but nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or diminish powers now vested in the Commission by the Inland Waterways Corporation Act of June 7, 1924, as amended; and nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or diminish powers now vested in the United directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action Act of June 7, 1924, as amended; and nothing in this act shall be construed to alter or diminish powers now vested in the United States Maritime Commission, the Department of Agriculture, or the Department of Commerce, not in conflict with the provisions of this act, or to affect any law of navigation, the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, liabilities of vessels and of owners for loss or damage, or laws respecting seamen, or any other statute or maritime law, regulation, or custom not in conflict with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, on page 206, line 17, after the word "enactment", to insert a colon and "Provided, however, That the Commission shall, if found by it necessary or desirable in the public interest, by general or special order, postpone the taking effect of any provision of this act with respect to a group or groups of water carriers, to such time after sixty days, as the Commission shall prescribe, but not beyond the 1st day of April 1940", so as to make the section

SEC. II. This act (except this section, which shall become effective immediately upon enactment) shall become effective 60 days after enactment: Provided, however, That the Commission shall, if found by it necessary or desirable in the public interest, by general or special order, postpone the taking effect of any provision of this act with respect to a group or groups of water carriers, to such time after 60 days, as the Commission shall prescribe, but not beyond the 1st day of April 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will renumber the paragraphs to accord with the action of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at this point I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of and by the authorization of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, beginning at line 12. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Brown in the chair]. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 206, it is proposed to insert after line 12 a new paragraph reading as follows:

(6) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, or agreements which have been issued or authorized by the United States Shipping Board or the Department of Commerce or United States Shipping Board or the Department of Commerce or the United States Maritime Commission under any provision of law repealed or amended by this act or in the exercise of duties, powers, or functions transferred to the Commission by this act and which are in effect at the time this act takes effect shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by the Commission or by operation of law. Any proceeding, hearing, or investigation commenced or pending before the United States Maritime Commission at the time this act takes effect shall be continued by the Commission in the same manner as though originally commenced before the Commission if such proceeding, hearing, or investigation (1) involves the administration of duties, powers, and functions transferred to the Commission by this act, or (2) involves the exercise of jurisdiction similar to that granted to the Commission under the provisions of this act. All records, reports, tariff schedules, contracts, or agreements transferred to the Commission under this act shall be available for use by the Commission to the same extent and shall be available for use by the Commission to the same extent and to the same effect as if such records were originally records of the

All schedules filed with the United States Maritime Commission prior to the effective date of this act under the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933 and the Shipping Act of 1916, as amended, relating to water transportation subject to this act, shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by the Commission or as otherwise provided in this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment was suggested by the experts of the Maritime Commission and the experts from the Interstate Commerce Commission working with us to cover the period of transfer of certain duties and authorities from the Maritime Commission to the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the bill is a clause which forbids the Interstate Commerce Commission suspending an initial schedule of a water carrier. In other words, it is for the purpose of protecting the water carrier.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REED. Let me finish the explanation, and I will yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. REED. No; I would rather not. The Maritime Commission has issued certain orders, and has certain rates in effect. It has certain proceedings pending before it. All the amendment proposes to do is to transfer the rates and orders and pending proceedings from the Maritime Commission to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It provides that such rates and schedules may be effective, and that any proceedings begun in the Maritime Commission shall be considered as having been begun in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and shall proceed from there.

Now I am glad to yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly clarify to the Senate what is meant by the term "initial schedule?"

Mr. REED. An initial schedule is a schedule of rates that is in effect on the date when regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission over water transportation takes effect.

Mr. McCARRAN. May the Senate understand this amendment as affecting that schedule?

Mr. REED. The amendment transfers the rates which have been authorized by the Maritime Commission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and continues those rates in effect until changed by order of the Interstate Commerce

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not that mean without hearing by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. REED. That would be correct; but the Interstate Commerce Commission can have a hearing. Somehow or other we have to get the authority, we have to get the schedules, we have to get the orders, we have to get the proceedings, from the Maritime Commission over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I may say, if the Senator will yield again, that it is the "somehow or other" in which I am interested.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Nevada that the amendment was prepared in conference with the Maritime Commission and with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it was written by them as being an amendment which would accomplish the desired purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. They were the ones who suggested it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have not had opportunity to read the amendment, but I think it is an all-encompassing amendment; in other words, as I listened to it being read, it seemed to affect the entire bill from beginning to end. I think it is far reaching.

Mr. REED. I assure the Senator from Nevada that he is in error in that.

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot be assured.

Mr. REED. It is the very simplest amendment we can frame to effect what is desired.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know, but these "simple" things are the things I am always suspicious of.

Mr. REED. I do not understand how anyone in the Senate could have a suspicious nature.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us adopt the amendment, and if there is any question about it, and the Senator desires to raise a point regarding it, we may reconsider the amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his suggestion?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think this amendment is all-important, and I want it understood by the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment? Let me suggest that the amendment go over until tomorrow, so that we may have further time to consider it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, we are dealing with a matter which affects the entire United States.

Mr. McNARY. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. We are dealing with something which affects every section of the Nation. We are dealing with something that is now far reaching in this country and will have a far-reaching effect for a long time to come. The Transportation Act of 1920 has had a far-reaching effect since its enactment to the present time. The pending bill, if enacted, will supersede the Transportation Act of 1920, if I am correct. In other words, the Transportation Act of 1920 will be set aside, all its provisions will be set aside, all decisions rendered in pursuance of and in keeping with the Transportation Act of 1920 will be set aside, even to the decisions of the court of last resort.

I want to know why the bill should be passed with only a few Senators present.

Mr. McNARY. I agree with the observations of the able Senator from Nevada. I do not think we should act on the bill this evening. I want the amendment to go over until tomorrow. I want time to study it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. I also want time to study it.

Mr. WHEELER. I am perfectly willing to let it go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it was not a matter that the committee was interested in, but it was suggested by the joint commission because the Commission thought it necessary to be done. I am frank to say to the Senate that I took the word of the Commissioners. I assumed they knew what they were doing.

However, I wish to say to the Senator that, of course, the bill amends the Transportation Act of 1920. I know the Senator from Nevada would desire the act of 1920 amended. One of the reasons why the water carriers and others are suspicious of the Interstate Commerce Commission is that Congress in the act of 1920 imposed duties upon the Interstate Commerce Commission which the Senator from Nevada never in the world would have voted for had he then been a Member of the Senate. I call attention to that because when the Interstate Commerce Commission is criticized for what it has done the criticism should rightly be directed against the Congress of the United States because of the Transportation Act which it passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not criticize the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think the Commission has done excellent work under the legislation Congress provided.

Mr. WHEELER. In framing the pending measure the committee was extremely careful to preserve every provision of the present law which has been construed by the Supreme Court up to the present time.

Mr. McCARRAN. While the Senator is on the floor, will he kindly tell me what effect the measure will have on the fourth

Mr. WHEELER. The fourth section remains as it now is, with the exception of the equidistance clause, which those who have been fighting for the retention of the fourth section say is unworkable and should be repealed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will not the repeal of that clause adversely affect the very territory which the Senator represents?

Mr. WHEELER. No, indeed. If it did it would not be repealed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am wondering whether today or tomorrow the Senator from Montana will clarify that point.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be very happy to do so. Let me say to the Senator from Nevada that Mr. John B.

Campbell, formerly a member of the Commission, testified before our committee for days and weeks. He represented the western section of the United States. Mr. Campbell wrote a letter to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], a copy of which was shown to me, in which he agreed to certain amendments to the fourth section which do not affect our section of the country. The proposed amendments dealt with noncontroversial matters. We amended the bill so that its provisions would apply when no controversy existed, but if there was a controversy, then the Commission could suspend the rate until such time as a hearing is had. That was agreed to by Mr. Campbell, and it was agreed to by the Commission. Some members of the Commission were opposed to the so-called Pettengill bill. We are maintaining the fourth section as it now is, with the exception of the equidistance clause. It was suggested that the fourth section be repealed, but I refused. I said that I would not introduce any bill which attempted to repeal the fourth section.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, the measure protects those who are interested in the long-and-short-haul provision of the law.

Mr. WHEELER. It certainly does.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state that the pending business is the final amendment on page 206, lines 17 to 23.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to make a proposal for a unanimousconsent agreement, and that is to recur to page 199, line 24, and reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his request until we dispose of the amendment on page 206, lines 17 to 23?

Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] to recur to the committee amendment on page 199 beginning in line 24? The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted be reconsidered, so that I may offer an amendment relating to the qualifications of the members of the board provided for in that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 199, beginning in line 24, was agreed to be reconsidered? The Chair hears none. The amendment is reconsidered.

Mr. AUSTIN. I move to amend the committee amendment on page 200, line 3, by inserting after the word "provided" and the period the following new sentence:

Not more than two members of said Board shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to, and, without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1939.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives. To the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

16, 1937, authorizing the establishment of a permanent instruction staff at the United States Coast Guard Academy, the annual Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy was appointed in January of this year, consisting of the following:
Senators: Hon. Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, chairman, Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, ex officio member;
Hon. Francis T. Maloney, of Connecticut; Hon. Wallace H. White, Jr., of Maine.

In further conformity to the above-mentioned act, the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of March 14, 1939, designated 9 a. m., Thursday, April 20, 1939, as the time for the meeting of the Board of Visitors at the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn. Senators Josiah W. Bailey and Wallace H. White, accompanied by Representatives Edward J. Hart and Richard J. Welch, left Washington at 10 a. m. April 19, arriving at New London, Conn., at about 5 p. m. the same date, when they were met by the superintendent of the academy and conducted to his quarters on the reservation. The departure of Representative S. O. Bland was delayed until 1 p. m. on account of a meeting of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and Senator Maloney was unable to leave Washington before 5 p. m. Members of the Board arriving at 5 were ington before 5 p. m. Members of the Board arriving at 5 were entertained at dinner by the superintendent and Mrs. Jones in their quarters. Later the party was joined by Representative Bland, and motion pictures depicting various phases of Coast Guard life were shown the members of the Board.

The Board convened the following morning at 0 a m and were

The Board convened the following morning at 9 a. m. and was later joined by Senator Maloney. The first business upon the assembling of the Board was the election of a chairman, and Representative S. O. Bland, the nominee of Senator J. W. Balley, was so elected. The Board expressed the desire that Commander (E) E. Reed-Hill, United States Coast Guard, act as secretary, a position filled by this officer during the meeting of the preceding Board in 1938

Admiral R. R. Waesche, Commandant of the United States Coast Guard, and Capt. E. D. Jones, Superintendent of the Academy, were invited to appear before the Board and to bring to the atten-tion of same any pertinent and necessary matters. There was a tion of same any pertinent and necessary matters. There was a general discussion of various matters affecting the academy with the exception of the curriculum, which the Board ascertained was satisfactorily taken care of by the advisory committee of the Coast Guard Academy, which, appointed by law, makes recommendations in such matters to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Board discussed and inquired into the following matters:

 Set-up of appropriations for the academy.
 The loss of the two schooners (Gloucester fishing type), one sunk and the other damaged beyond economic repair by the hurricane of September 1938.

(8) The pay and allowances of cadets.
(9) The handling of cadet funds and cadet messes.

The Board was most favorably impressed with the academy and The Board was most favorably impressed with the academy and the administration thereof and finds it a thoroughly modern educational institution of high standards. The Board believes that comparatively few young men are familiar with the advantages of a cadetship in the Coast Guard, and the Board is of the opinion that every reasonable effort should be made to present to the qualified throughout the country the opportunity offered at the Coast Guard Academy for an education and a career.

The Board recommends an appropriation of not to exceed $200,000 for the construction of a suitable vessel for the training of cadets in the handling of sails—this vessel to be a replacement of the two schooners no longer available due to damage sustained by the hurricane—as the proper training of cadets is being seriously handi-capped by the lack of a suitable sailing vessel; that additional funds be made available for replacements, supplies, and repairs to laboratory equipment; and that the act of April 16, 1937, be so amended that when a member appointed in January is unable to attend the annual meeting an additional member may be appointed in his stead.

The Board desires to make mention of the cordial reception and hospitable treatment furnished its members by Captain Jones, the other officers, and cadets at the academy.

Having completed its inspection, the Board departed New London at 2:19 and arrived in Washington at 9:20 that night.

Respectfully submitted.

THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the Coast Guard established in 1790 as the Revenue Marine is the national maritime lawenforcement agency of the United States. Its police powers are derived from the laws enacted for the regulations and promotion of American sea-borne commerce. Its growth parallels the maritime development of the Nation. The reasons for the establishment of the service and the duties imposed upon it are so closely interwoven with the history of the commerce and navigation of the United States as to constitute a single theme.

The Coast Guard officer of today must be trained for an organization which is charged primarily with performing important peacetime functions in the maritime field, including instruction and training of licensed and unlicensed personnel of the merchant service, and secondarily with the preparation for national defense in time of war.

At New London, Conn., the Coast Guard Academy, a modern educational institution of high standing, is maintained for the professional instruction of candidates for a commission in the United States Coast Guard. Cadetships at this institution are granted to qualified young men of not less than 17 nor more than 22 years of age following open competitive examinations held throughout the United States annually. The course at the academy requires the completion of 4 full years of study and the work done is well in excess of that ordinarily required for a bachelor of science degree from civilian institutions. In addition to the time given to engineering, seamanship, navigation, and other professional and cultural subjects, the cadet specializes in maritime law and courses related to maritime economics and maritime transportation.

Originally the officers for the revenue marine were commissioned from the merchant service and it is interesting to follow the evolution of the process of obtaining Coast Guard officers. Many of the original appointees had served in the Continental Navy during the Revolution; some were destined to return to distinguished careers in the Navy with the cutters permanently placed on that establishment after the quasi war with France. The cutters thus served to carry on unbroken the traditions of the Revolutionary Navy.

For a period of 85 years officers were obtained from both the Navy and the merchant marine. This had the advantage of providing the service with officers having an understanding of both naval and merchant ship methods. A serious disadvantage, however, was the cleavage between two groups whose background and training were basically dissimilar. Some naval officers detailed to the cutters found the service distasteful, the duties irksome. In consequence, Secretary of the Treasury Louis McLane in 1832 issued orders discontinuing the detail system and providing that vacancies should be filled by promotions made within the

During the period that followed junior officers were appointed as third lieutenants. They received their training aboard ship until a vacancy as second lieutenant occurred. The principal disadvantage to this system was that some of the officers appointed to the probationary grade were too old to learn their profession. The need for younger material was recognized, but for many years little was done to remedy the situation.

Finally, Secretary of the Treasury John Sherman secured passage of the law establishing the cadet system. The act of July 31, 1876, provided:

That hereafter upon the occurring of a vacancy in the grade of third lieutenant in the Revenue Marine Service, the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint a cadet, not less than 18 nor more than 25 years of age, with rank next below that of third lieutenant, whose pay shall be three-fourths that of a third lieutenant, and who shall not be appointed to a higher grade until he shall have served a probationary term of 2 years and passed the examination required by the regulations of said Service.

Under this authority a board consisting of Capts. George C. Moore, J. H. Merryman, and J. A. Henriques was convened at Washington in December 1876 to hold the first examinations for cadetship. As a result of this examination 8 of the 19 candidates were appointed. The schooner Dobbin was overhauled and fitted as a school ship and Captain Henriques appointed to command. On May 25, 1877, the Dobbin sailed on the first practice cruise. Her complement was 3 officers, a surgeon, 6 warrant officers, and 17 men in addition to the 8 cadets.

On October 15 the Dobbin arrived at New Bedford, Mass., which had been chosen as winter headquarters, and the first academic term began. Prof. Edwin Emery, of Whitinville, Mass., was appointed to teach algebra, history, English, and French. The two lieutenants taught navigation, seamanship, and gunnery.

In the meantime plans had been drawn for a new cadet training ship. This vessel, named after Secretary of the Treasury (later Chief Justice) Salmon P. Chase, was bark rigged, 1061/4 feet long, 251/2 feet beam, armed with four 4-inch guns. The cadet steerage had accommodations for 12 cadets in six staterooms. The Chase replaced the Dobbin in the summer of 1878, and for the next 12 years operated under the sytem originally provided, that is, in port for academic instruction during 8 or 9 months of the year, and cruising for practical instruction during the other 3 or 4

In 1890 there was a surplus of graduates of the naval academy. The Chase was accordingly placed out of commission and for the next 4 years the lower grades were filled by appointments from this surplus. In May 1894, in consequence of the absorption by the Navy of all graduates of the academy, the Chase was recommissioned and a new class appointed under the previous system.

Under the operation of the act of March 2, 1895, the retirement of officers who previously had been retained on the active rolls of the service under "waiting orders", and the promotions incident to these retirements entirely exhausted the grade of third lieutenant. In order to provide the large number of officers required to fill the junior grade, the Chase was lengthened by 40 feet, cadet accommodations increased to 12 double rooms, and the system of instruction completely reorganized. Under the new scheme entrance requirements were materially raised with the idea of obtaining cadets whose scholastic education would be practically complete before appointment, thus leaving the 2-year course open for technical and professional instruction. This required a change in the division of time between cruising and port instruction to 7 months at sea and 4 months in port. During the remaining month the practice cutter underwent an annual overhaul and the cadets were granted leave.

The course of instruction at this time was mainly in seamanship, navigation, marine surveying, compass correction, naval architecture, gunnery, and law. Instruction in marine engineering was rudimentary as there was no machinery aboard the Chase. The engineer officers of the service constituted a separate corps and were obtained from graduates of engineering schools.

Beginning in 1900 the Chase made its winter headquarters at Arundel Cove, near Baltimore. Here in a few frame buildings converted to serve as classrooms the school of instruction established its first shore roots. In 1903, Congress authorized the extension of the course to 3 years.

The act of June 23, 1906, authorized the appointment of two civilian instructors and also provided for the appointment of cadet engineers to serve a probationary time of at least 6 months. After the passage of this act, the curriculum was completely revised. The policy of teaching only professional subjects was abandoned; history, English, physics, and chemistry were added; the course in mathematics was increased in scope. A course for cadet engineers was provided and the instruction of line cadets in engineering was broadened. Cadets were required to agree to serve for 3 years after graduation.

In 1907 the Chase made her last cruise. As a parting gesture to the age of steam that had overtaken and passed her spotless hull, she sailed in review before the massed fleets of the navies of the world gathered, 140 strong, in Hampton Roads to celebrate the three-hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Virginia. For 30 years this beautiful ship had served both as a home and school for the future officers of the service. The next 30 years were destined to hold greater changes in navigation than the previous three centuries. The era of sail was dead.

The Chase was replaced by the Itasca, a brig-rigged steamer. The cadet corps had grown from 8 to 60. From now on engineering began to play a more important part in the course of instruction and additional shore facilities for this branch became necessary. After a survey of available locations, negotiations were begun with the Army which resulted in the transfer of Fort Trumbull, in New London, to the service. Here further changes were made in the curriculum: the course for cadet engineers was lengthened to 1 year.

In 1915 the Revenue-Cutter Service and Life Saving Service were consolidated to "constitute a part of the military forces of the United States." This increased the scope of operation of the service materially, and increased its effectiveness as an arm of the national defense.

During the next few years the problem of crowding into a 3 years' course the variety of instruction demanded by the service became acute. The intervention of the World War, during which the academy was turned into a training station for the Navy, overshadowed this problem for the time being, but the end of the war brought it again into the foreground.

The post-war period was one of rapid change for the Coast Guard. Aviation had been introduced; numerous added duties imposed. In order to combat the rising tide of smuggling after the passage of the National Prohibition Act the Coast Guard fleet was greatly expanded and a temporary increase in officers and men to man this fleet was authorized in 1924. Finally in the act of July 3, 1926, a permanent increase in the officer personnel was authorized, the line and Engineers Corps were consolidated and the Secretary of the Treasury was given discretion to increase the course of instruction to 4 years. In 1929 the construction of a new academy on a site provided by the city of New London was authorized. In 1930 the 4-year course was inaugurated. In 1932 transfer to the newly completed academy was effected.

With the provision of this modern and completely equipped plant matériel requirements are adequately met. The principal changes since then have had as their objective the improvement of the course of instruction so as to take full advantage of the facilities provided.

With this in mind the Commandant, in 1934, asked the presidents of Columbia, Harvard, and Yale Universities and Massachusetts Institute of Technology each to nominate a member of the faculty to serve as members of an advisory committee to recommend changes in the course of instruction. The work of this committee in laying out a sound curriculum and their continuing interest in the improvement of this course has been invaluable. As a result of their recommendations a permanent staff of professors and instructors was authorized by the act of April 16, 1937. This act also provided for the appointment of the advisory committee and of a board of visitors composed of three Senators and four Members of the House of Representatives.

This legislation, enacted almost exactly 60 years from the date the first cadet reported on board the Dobbin, has served to crown the efforts of those early officers whose foresight has provided the Coast Guard with the complete facilities now available for the education of its future officers.

The Coast Guard is a military service. It was founded as such by Alexander Hamilton, who recommended that its first officers be commissioned by the President, on the ground that "it will not only induce fit men the more readily to engage but will attach them to their duty by a nicer sense of honor."

The system of discipline established at the academy is accordingly military in character. Its purpose is to develop the qualities of leadership upon which the success of any service largely depends.

For this two instruments are available—the cadet battalion ashore and the practice cruise at sea.

Each newly appointed cadet takes his place in the battalion, where his military instruction begins. Discipline at the academy centers in this organization, which is officered throughout by cadets selected on a basis of seniority and proficiency under the supervision of the tactical officers assigned. Military responsibilities are laid on gradually, and promotion to cadet company and battalion officers in the first class year come as a reward for the demonstration of military character, proficiency, and leadership.

The annual practice cruise begins about June 1 and is of $2\frac{1}{2}$ months' duration. The first and third classes embark on the latest class of cutters for a foreign cruise of about 10,000 miles. The itineraries of these cruises are planned to include carefully selected ports in European and South American waters. While in port, tours to places of historical and scientific interest are arranged. These trips are of considerable cultural value. During the cruises a cadet makes while at the academy he may have the opportunity of observing widely separated nationalities in a score of foreign countries in Europe, Africa, South America, and the West Indies.

The second class makes shorter coastwise cruises in sail and on patrol boats of the service, while the newly appointed class which reports in August is also given several week-end and other short cruises to accustom them to their future service afloat.

Aboard ship the cadets take their places in the regular ship's organization. They stand watch on deck and in the engine room according to their experience, navigate, man the battery and boats, steer and heave the lead. In the complex ship routine they apply the theory they learn in their classes ashore and learn the practical uses of seamanship, navigation, engineering, and gunnery.

In the course of the cruise they complete the firing course in rifle, pistol, and machine-gun practices at a Coast Guard range. Toward the end of the cruise they join other ships of the service in the course of battle practice prescribed for all Coast Guard ships.

The cadet's day begins with reveille at 6 a.m. Ten minutes later assembly sounds, the battalion marches to the dock, and mans the flotilla of ships' boats for a half hour's pull. Breakfast formation is at 7:05. After breakfast the cadets make their beds and prepare their rooms for inspection. At 7:45 the battalion is formed for inspection and marched to class for the first recitation at 8. Recitation and study periods of 1 hour each follow until noon. Fifteen cadets constitute a class section. Lunch formation is at 12:15 p.m. Recitations and laboratory work are resumed at 1 and continue until 3, when an hour of supervised physical training is held. The period from 4 to 6 is devoted to team practice and other sports. Dinner formation is at 6:15. From 7 to 10, study hours are observed. Taps at 10:10 ends the day.

Military drill is held 3 days a week in 1-hour periods. Liberty is granted on Wednesday afternoon from 4:15 to 6, on Saturday afternoon from 1 to midnight, and on Sunday from after chapel to 7 p. m.

During the practice cruise, ship routine is observed.

Leave is granted for 1 week at Christmas and for 3 weeks at the end of the practice cruise.

The Academy occupies a reservation of 45 acres overlooking the Thames River at New London, Conn. Built as a unit at a cost of two and three-quarter million dollars in 1932, the red brick buildings of colonial Georgian architecture are both pleasing in appearance and effectively planned.

The administration building, Hamilton Hall, named for the first Secretary of the Treasury, contains the administrative offices, board rooms and a library, on whose walls are murals descriptive of service history. The library contains about 12,000 volumes, which are now added to at the rate of about 2,000 volumes a year. The entire second floor is occupied by a sick bay of 20 beds, completely equipped with operating, X-ray, chemical, and dental laboratories.

Flanking Hamilton Hall to the southward is the academic building, Satterlee Hall, named for Capt. Charles Satterlee, who, with his entire crew, was lost in the cutter Tampa, torpedoed by a German submarine in the World War. Classrooms and laboratories for electricity, radio, metallurgy, physics, and chemistry are located in this building.

To the northward of Hamilton Hall is Chase Hall, the cadet barracks, named for Salmon P. Chase, Lincoln's Secretary of the Treasury, and afterward Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Cadet rooms, arranged on three "decks," are assigned in accordance with the battalion organization. The first deck also contains the first class and the second and third class recreation rooms; the fourth class rates no recreation room. This deck also contains offices for the officers of the day, both cadet and commissioned, and the commandant of cadets. The basement contains a well-equipped, small-bore rifle range.

Across the quadrangle from Chase Hall is the cadet mess hall and galley.

Directly behind Hamilton Hall is the engineering building, McAllister Hall, named for Capt. Charles A. McAllister, engineer in chief of the Coast Guard from 1905 to 1919 and later president of the American Bureau of Shipping. This building contains machine and carpenter shops, foundry, and an engineering laboratory, which is one of the best arranged and most up to date of any in the country. Complete steam, Diesel, and gasoline engine ship installations, auxiliary machinery, aircraft engines, and testing instruments are laid out so that they may be moved and hooked up as required for tests. The equipment includes a full-sized working fire room and auxiliary engine room of the type found aboard a modern cutter, complete with forced draft, air lock, and measuring tanks.

South of McAllister Hall is the enlisted men's barracks, Yeaton Hall, named for Hopley Yeaton, the first commissioned officer of the Service.

Behind Yeaton Hall is Billard Hall, named for Admiral Frederick C. Billard, superintendent of the Academy at the outbreak of the World War and Commandant of the Coast Guard when the new Academy was authorized. The main floor of this building contains a large gymnasium, a gunnery spotting range, a stage, and a trophy room, in which is housed the Perham collection of small arms and numerous athletic trophies.

The lower level contains a 60-foot swimming pool, showers and locker rooms, and squash court. On this same floor is the armory, containing small arms, types of guns used in the Coast Guard from 1-pounder to 5-inch, fire-control equipment, wrecking mines, depth charges, and ammunition samples.

Extending north from Billard Hall is Jones Field, named for Cadet Henry L. Jones, '29, lost at sea, July 3, 1927. On the wall bounding this field is a section of the giant chain which was stretched across the Hudson River at West Point to prevent the passage of British warships.

Below Billard Hall and overlooking the river from a high rock is the observatory with its traditional "walk" and gallery. Opposite the observatory is the rigging loft, scene of the annual ring dance, at other times devoted to the more prosaic uses of instruction in seamanship and storage of boat gear.

The waterfront extending from a wharf at the south at which the largest cutters may lie, to the seaplane ramp at the north provides facilities for the fleet of small boats used for instruction and a filled-in field used for housing visiting airplanes.

Officers' quarters, occupying the high hill bounding the reservation to the southward, complete the academy's physical plant

The academy was designed to accommodate 208 cadets but is capable of handling 312 by berthing 3 in a room. Shops, laboratories, classrooms, and other facilities are capable of handling this expansion. The usefulness of this provision has already been demonstrated for with the establishment of a Maritime Service Training School for officers of the merchant marine at Fort Trumbull, the shops and laboratories at the academy are used for the practical instruction of this group.

Individuals pass through the academy as their classes graduate, the cadet corps remains to hand down the customs that have become a part of its tradition. These customs have evolved into a way of living distinctive of the academy. The cadet corps as repository of this heritage plays an important part in academy life. It serves not only to temper the rigor of the course of instruction but to build up morale by sponsoring the various extra-curricular activities that constitute an important part of academy life.

These activities afford a welcome break in the routine, provide the important factor of social relaxation and encourage initiative and sportsmanship.

Besides the regular physical instruction provided in the routine, the academy maintains intercollegiate schedules in football, basketball, baseball, boxing, swimming, rifle, cross country, tennis, and sailing. Intramural competition in these sports and in soccer supplement the varsity schedules. Competition is in general confined to nearby New England colleges, among which are Trinity, Wesleyan, Amherst, Connecticut State, Clark, Massachusetts State, Worcester Tech, Norwich University, and Middlebury. In boxing, which is considered a major sport because of its value in promoting courage and self-reliance, schedules are maintained with the leading eastern colleges, including Yale, Rutgers, Western Maryland, and Syracuse. The boxing squad is normally as large as the football squad. Cadets who have been awarded varsity insignia by the athletic association for playing on the various teams are eligible to membership in the Monogram Club. The wide participation by cadets in all forms of athletic sports is indicated by the fact that more than one-third of the corps as a rule are members of the Monogram Club.

Small-boat sailing, while classed as athletics, is also encouraged as a useful recreational activity. Included in the fleet attached to the academy are six one-design sloops which cadets are allowed to use during their own time after reaching the required standard of proficiency.

Musical organizations include the Glee Club and the cadet orchestra. All cadets are required to learn to dance. Regularly scheduled dances are held throughout the winter months. During graduation week the ring dance of the second class and the formal graduation dance serve to bring the social season to a close.

Publications include Running Light, a guide for the fourth class, and Tide Rips, the annual of the first class. Tide Rips serves as a record of the graduating class and contains numerous illustrations and descriptions of the academy and the cruise.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] made a most excellent address last night over the radio on national finances and relief. I wish every person in the country might read that address, and I ask unanimous consent to include it in an extension of remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I ask unanimous consent that this committee may, on Wednesday and Thursday of this week, sit during the sessions of the House. They will have under consideration the Wagner-Rogers-Dingell bill, and a number of witnesses from various sections of the country will be here, who must be heard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a very brief statement in the press on the question of un-Americanism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE TOWNSEND BILL

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

LXXXIV-379

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I hate to have to continue to explain, but owing to no fault whatever of the Committee on Ways and Means there are imperfections in the Townsend bill. For this reason the committee was not able to take final action today but will do so tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker and Members, I call your attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 22, and my remarks, in which I made a defense of the actions of the Committee on Ways and Means. Some Members have thought I made disparaging remarks. I am sorry they misconstrued what I intended. The record speaks for itself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida may proceed for 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] on what authority he states that the committee will act on the Townsend bill tomorrow? I had a conversation with him this morning and he stated at that time he had received a communication from Dr. Townsend, in which he stated he wanted us to consider a new bill. The only thing I promised the gentleman was that if the bill was introduced I would bring it to the attention of the committee tomorrow.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will accept the gentleman's statement. I had no intention of committing the gentleman to action tomorrow. I will offer the perfected bill, as I was asked to do, and I hope the gentleman's committee will take action.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I only said I would bring it to the attention of the committee, and I hope to do that tomorrow.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein certain correspondence between Dr. Townsend, the gentleman from Florida, Representative Hendricks, and myself in respect to the amendments discussed on the floor of the House this morning which Dr. Townsend promised to furnish the committee. I may say that there has been some criticism of our committee about its slowness of action in reporting the Townsend bill. The criticism has been unjust. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may place in the RECORD at this point the correspondence setting forth what has taken place between Dr. Townsend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS], and myself with respect to his bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Under leave to extend. I insert the following extract from Dr. Townsend's testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means on February 17, 1939:

Mr. McCormack. You said that you had some amendments that you were going to submit to the House if the bill came up for con-sideration in the House.

Dr. TOWNSEND. Yes

Mr. McCobmack. Why do you not submit those amendments to the committee?

Dr. Townsend. I will, if they want them.

Mr. McCormack. We have been here for some time and we will be here for some time longer. Do you not think the proper place be here for some time longer. Do you not think the proper place to submit amendments, if you have any of them, to your bill, is to the committee before which the bill is being heard?

Dr. TOWNSEND. I really did not know that this was the place where amendments were to be submitted.

Mr. McCormack. This is the place where amendments should be offered, because if we are going to take any action on the bill, we will consider the bill in executive session and then make amendments to it. That is the usual course of procedure. amendments to it. That is the usual course of procedure.

Dr. Townsend. I will present my proposed amendments to you

Dr. Townsend did not present his proposed amendments on the following day, as he promised. The hearings continued until April 7, 1939, but on no day during this time did Dr. Townsend present or tender to the committee his suggested amendments. In fact, nothing further was heard from him until on May 10, 1939, approximately 3 months later, I received a letter from Dr. Townsend dated May 9. 1939, enclosing certain suggested amendments, and on May 17 the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] introduced H. R. 6378, which purported to contain the amendments to H. R. 2, which Dr. Townsend desired.

On May 19, 1939, I received the following letter from Dr. Townsend:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1939.

Hon. Robert L. Doughton,

Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Doughton: Recently Congressman Hendricks intro-

Dear Mr. Doughton: Recently Congressman Hendricks introduced H. R. 6378, which was referred to the Ways and Means Committee, of which you are chairman.

It occurred to me that since an issue has been built up on H. R. 2 (also introduced by Congressman Hendricks) the question may arise in your committee as to which bill the Townsend forces prefer. May I assure you and all members of the Ways and Means Committee that H. R. 6378 is the same bill as H. R. 2, except that H. R. 6378 carries the amendments which I submitted to your committee, and which I am sure improve the bill. It was my suggestion that Congressman Hendricks introduce H. R. 6378 in order that we may get a vote on a bill drawn as we wish it. I therefore sincerely recommend that your committee take action on H. R. 6378 instead of H. R. 2.

Respectfully,

Respectfully,

Dr. Francis E. Townsend.

This morning I received the following letters from Dr. Townsend and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS], which are self-explanatory:

WASHINGTON D. C., May 23, 1939.

Hon. Robert L. Doughton,

Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Doughton: Recently, in accordance with the request of the committee, I submitted to you as chairman copies of the amendments which we desired to H. R. 2 in accordance with our subsequently you requested Congressman Hendricks to prepare a new draft of bill incorporating these amendments. This was accordingly done, and new draft of bill, now known as H. R. 6378, was introduced in the House by Congressman Hendricks on May

On May 19 I wrote you as chairman advising that we would very much appreciate H. R. 6378 being reported to the House.

It now appears that through stenographic error H. R. 6378 omits one section of H. R. 2. I am herewith enclosing a copy of the omitted section, and trust this may be included in the bill H. R. 6378 as reported to the House. If new draft is desired to correct this stenographic error, Congressman Hendricks will be pleased to introduce a new bill in the House this new. introduce a new bill in the House this noon.

Respectfully.

Dr. FRANCIS E. TOWNSEND.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Washington, D. C., May 23, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON.

Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,

Chairman, ways and Means Committee,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: I understand that Dr. Townsend has written you this morning and submitted a section that was left out of the new bill H. R. 6378 and asking that this section be included. This section is not new material or new amendment. It is simply a provision of H. R. 2 which was left out of H. R. 6378 through stenographic error. stenographic error.

I sincerely recommend that the committee take action and place I sincerely recommend that the committee take action and place this section back in H. R. 6378. I may suggest that both proponents and opponents are desirous of voting on the issue as the Townsend people prefer it. If I thought you were prepared to make a favorable report on this bill, I would expect you to make whatever amendments you desired that you thought would improve it; but since I am sure that the committee has no intention of making a favorable report but simply report it without recommendation in order to give the proponents and opponents a chance to vote on the issue, I feel that it is imperative that this section go back in.

go back in

go back in.

I would like to advise the committee that I have worked under pressure for a number of weeks to avoid the petition method, and up to now have been successful on the ground that the committee has assured me that they will give me some sort of report. I sincerely trust that the negotiations for this report will not break down because of a simple stenographic error, as I do not believe there would be any justification for it.

Today is the deadline for the petition. I would still like to keep it out; and if the committee will merely say that they will give us a report without recommendation on a clean bill, I shall be glad to introduce a new bill today, even though I would prefer having to introduce a new bill today, even though I would prefer having this matter inserted in the present bill, which can easily be done by the committee.

With kind regards, I beg to remain,
Respectfully,

JOE HENDRICKS.

Dr. Townsend is in error in stating that I had requested the gentleman from Florida to prepare a new draft of a bill incorporating the amendments suggested by him. I merely stated to the gentleman from Florida that if he introduced such a bill I would bring the same to the attention of our committee for its consideration.

The foregoing correspondence speaks for itself, and any intelligent and fair-minded person will certainly come to the conclusion that if any criticism should be directed at anyone, it would be to Dr. Townsend and his associates for their failure to present a definite program and not change their minds from day to day.

After a great deal of clamor for a hearing on H. R. 2, Dr. Townsend disowned this bill early in the hearings, and then waited until the hearings were concluded and almost 3 months after his abandonment of H. R. 2, to submit his new bill, H. R. 6378, and then within a few days after the introduction of this bill, he comes forward with the statement that the committee should not act on H. R. 6378, as it is incorrect, and a new bill will have to be introduced.

The Ways and Means Committee has been most patient.

despite these dilatory tactics.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] a question. The bill that he will introduce today will contain the amendments that Dr. Townsend promised the Ways and Means Committee on February 17 he would give us the following day; is that right?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know what Dr. Townsend promised the committee, but it contains the amendments that Dr. Townsend wanted.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will call the gentleman's attention to the printed hearings, page 609, where Dr. Townsend promised to have certain amendments to H. R. 2 in the hands of the committee the following day. If the bill that the gentleman introduced the other day contains the Townsend amendments, then it is only fair to have the RECORD show that 3 months elapsed from the time Dr. Townsend promised these amendments until the time the committee received them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not have any objection to the gentleman having the RECORD show what he will.

LABOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and for the appointment of conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

There was no objection; and the Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. Tarver, Mr. Houston, Mr. Rabaut, Mr. PLUMLEY, and Mr. ENGEL.

EXTENSION OF FACILITIES OF UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3537) to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the foreign service of the United States. with Senate amendments thereto, disagree with the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what are the Senate amendments?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not know. They are very minor amendments but I do not know what they are.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection; and the Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. Bloom, Mr. Luther A. Johnson, and Mr. FISH.

BUSINESS IN THE SIXTH YEAR OF ROOSEVELT IS ABOUT 50 PERCENT BETTER THAN IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF HOOVER

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein a brief article containing a tabulation of figures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to place in the RECORD for the information of the Members of the House and the people of the country the very illuminating figures which were published in the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., May 22, 1939, in an article written by its national columnist, Mr. Jay Franklin. The figures relating to every known barometer and index of business show the degree of recovery and improvement in general business conditions existing at the present time as compared with the last year of the Hoover administration. Present conditions in every activity of business, industry, agriculture, and finance are shown to be 50 percent better than they were in 1932. The facts speak for themselves and furnish a complete answer to the false and misleading propaganda to the contrary which is being circulated throughout the country.

The article referred to is as follows:

WE, THE PEOPLE-BUSINESS RAGES ROOSEVENT IS RUINING IT, BUT FIGURES ARGUE DIFFERENTLY

(By Jay Franklin)

For some strange reason the Tories rage and the Wall Streeters For some strange reason the Tories rage and the Wall Streeters gnash their fangs whenever a new dealer points out that they are making pots more money under Roosevelt than under Hoover. They became angry when I quoted the financial editor of the Chicago American, they became furious when I quoted the Associated Press, and they will probably excommunicate me for citing these figures from Dr. Eric Muehlberger. I do not guarantee them in detail, but I am convinced of their substantial accuracy.

The figures under comparison are for the first part of 1939 and the first part of 1932, using quarterly or weekly totals, as available. Remember, in early 1932 it was far from sure—politically—that Pesident Hoover would not be reelected. Business had all the confidence the White House could pump into the market, taxes were conveniently low, there were no National Labor Relations Act, S. E. C., wage and hour law, or other forms of "regimentation" to act as a "deterrent" on business enterprise, and there were no serious foreign war scares. Here you have the picture of Mr. Hoover's "confident" business and Mr. Roosevelt's "discouraged" business:

Since all these figures are, at best, approximations, the whole case for the New Deal's business policy can be summarized by saying that in the sixth year of Roosevelt business is about 50 percent better than in the third year of Hoover.

All right; you business babies who are howling that Roosevelt is ruining you, let's see you take a crack at this picture. And remember these Hoover figures are taken from the first part of 1932, when you had your man in the White House and the Government was taking its orders from you. The figures for 1939 are taken from a period when Roosevelt was acting for the country as a whole, and they say that you are much better off under the New Deal than under the old order. And still you squawk!

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make this further statement to the House: I have complied with the rule by submitting the manuscript to the Public Printer and have received an estimate of the cost. The Public Printer advises me this document is one and one-half pages more than the length regularly authorized. I ask unanimous consent that this address may be printed in the RECORD notwithstanding that fact.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the Record and to include therein a reference to the fact that whenever any remarks are made with reference to trade treaties, propaganda statistics are inserted in the Record immediately after

STATE DEPARTMENT PROPAGANDA ON TRADE TREATIES

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to direct the attention of the House to the efficient and high-geared propaganda machine of the State Department.

It has gotten so that every time a Republican Member speaks on the subject of trade treaties some Member on the other side of the aisle rises and asks permission to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Republican Member's remarks certain of the State Department's propaganda extolling the alleged benefits of the trade-treaty program. Apparently the Members carry this ready-prepared propaganda around in their pockets so as to have it ready at the opportune time.

This practice of filling the RECORD with this propaganda has occurred time and time again. It happened yesterday, when at the conclusion of my remarks the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee] asked permission to insert a statement by Albert J. Hutzler, of the Trade Agreements Unit of the Department of Commerce. This statement had already been printed in the RECORD at public expense at least once and possibly several times before. Sometimes these insertions take the form of articles which have been prepared in one of the departments, and sometimes they take the form of extensions of the Member's own remarks.

The statement which was inserted yesterday by the gentleman from Washington proves that it is impossible to depend upon any of the Government agencies for the real facts with reference to the treaty program. The Government propaganda always shows the favorable side of the treaty program, but never the unfavorable side. It is accordingly necessary for Republican Members of Congress to give the other side of the picture so that the people may judge for themselves the real effects of the treaty program.

Even the Members on the other side of the aisle have been misled by this propaganda. For example, the majority leader stated yesterday that in 1926, 1927, and 1928, under Republican tariffs, this country had practically no commerce with the rest of the world.

Of course, that was a perfectly absurd statement. Yet anyone reading it in the RECORD would have a right to rely upon it, coming as it does from one in such a responsible position. The fact is, however, that in the years of which he spoke our foreign trade was undergoing a great expansion. In 1928 our exports amounted to over $5,000,000,000, or some $2,000,000,000 in excess of last year.

I cite this incident merely to show that there is much work to be done on the part of the Republican minority in showing up not only the misrepresentations of the alleged benefits of the treaty program but also the misrepresentations of the alleged iniquities of the Republican tariff policy.

We who have been endeavoring to demonstrate the fallacies of the treaty program and the dangers which are inherent in the present tariff reduction policy face a tremendous difficulty in getting the facts to the people. It is virtually impossible, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] pointed out yesterday, for opponents of the treaty program to get any publicity of their arguments except through the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which, as we all know, does not have a very wide distribution. Why this should be I do not know, since we are supposed to have a free press in this country. It seems strange that anything said in favor of the treaty program comes under the heading of news, but that anything said in opposition does not.

Another thing we have to contend with is the practice of the State Department in sending its emissaries throughout the country to address women's clubs, chambers of commerce, and so on, for the purpose of spreading one-sided information in reference to the treaty program. When these audiences hear only one side of the story and when the people read only one side of the story in the press they are likely to be convinced that the treaty program has some merit. But when they become acquainted with the real facts they will realize they have been deceived.

We of the Republican minority are waging an uphill fight in bringing home to the people the truth about the treaty program and what it is doing to them. We will continue that fight until it is won.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, in October of last year I joined with some other Members of Congress from Illinois in a telegram to the President of the United States, urging that he take proper steps to impress upon the Government of Great Britain the profound interest of the United States in seeing that the promises of the Balfour declaration of 1917 to the Jewish people are fully carried out. At that time there were reports that the British Government was preparing to renounce its pledge of 1917 that Palestine would be the homeland of the Jewish people. And those of us who are deeply interested in that pledge being kept as Christendom's obligation to the Zionists joined in an appeal to the President to make representations to the British Government that this Government would view with disfavor any renunciation of that obligation.

I rise here to make a public appeal to the President of the United States. I urge that this Government immediately protest, in behalf of the people of the United States, against the proposal embodied in the White Paper issued last week. Great Britain proposes to make Palestine a state for both Arab and Jewish people. That amounts to a betrayal of Jewish people.

The Balfour declaration of 1917 and the establishment of the mandate for Palestine under Great Britain was clearly intended to make Palestine the homeland of the Jews. That is made evident not only from the language of the declaration itself but also by the statements of the heads of various governments made at the time.

The declaration was unreservedly endorsed by the other powers. The French Government on June 4, 1917, through its Minister, M. Cambon, committed itself to—

The renaissance of the Jewish nationality in that land from which the people of Israel were exiled so many centuries ago.

In America, President Wilson wrote at the time that-

The allied nations, with the fullest concurrence of our own Government and people, are agreed that in Palestine shall be laid the foundation of a Jewish commonwealth.

Mr. Speaker, even the statements made by the British Cabinet Ministers who played an active part in framing the Balfour declaration, indicated that it was fully intended that Palestine would be the "homeland" of the Jews. Lloyd George said:

Great Britain extended its mighty hand in friendship to the Jewish people to help it regain its ancient national home and to realize its age-long aspirations. Lord Robert Cecil stated: "Our wish is that Arabian countries shall be for Arabs, Armenia for the Armenians, and Judea for the Jews."

In short, Mr. Speaker, Great Britain and the other powers committed themselves to the pledge that Palestine would be the homeland of the Jews. That pledge must be kept. I urge that this Government impress that fact upon the Government of Great Britain.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] in a controversy with my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] made this statement:

May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Congressional Record is the one free press we have left in which both sides can be presented.

Mr. Speaker, I have given instructions that the name of the gentleman from Mississippi be placed on the mailing list of the Wilkinsburg Gazette in order that he may receive copies from two free presses.

Mr. RANKIN. Why that punishment? In the words of Christ to St. Paul, "Why persecutest thou Me?"

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill which, if enacted, would require all imported articles to be conspicuously labeled, "Foreign goods." At the present time, imported articles are required to carry a statement as to the country of their origin. For instance, a can of Argentine beef will have in small printing on the can, "Made in Argentina." The present markings go unnoticed and so far as protecting American industry is concerned, they are ineffective.

My bill proposes to place in a conspicuous place on every imported article, a mark, stamp, brand, label, or tag of yellow color, with the words "foreign goods" printed thereon in gothic type. These labels shall be in proportion with the size of the article or package, but in no case shall be less than 1 inch square. This bill, if enacted into law, will enable the American public to detect foreign goods on the shelves of the stores and shops of our Nation.

The American market is the birthright of American agriculture and American labor. They are entitled to that market. We are happy to observe that the American public is unanimously in favor of the American market for the American farmer, laborer, and businessman. This was emphatically shown in their protest recently made when the President of the United States stated the contrary doctrine.

We should let the public know whom they are patronizing, and thus create a demand for American goods. Let us call a spade a spade, and brand imported articles as foreign goods with a conspicuous yellow tag. Let us give the American buying public a chance to decide whom they shall patronize. I, for one, firmly believe that everyone living under the Stars and Stripes should at all times possible, patronize American agriculture, American labor, and American industry. The American market is the only market we have, all others are like unto a house builded upon the sand—let us protect the American market.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record, and I include therein a letter on the farm problem which I received from Ira Ashby, manager of 20 tenant farms, comprising 6,050 acres, located in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

A NEW REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT—LEADING REPUBLICANS ANSWER MR. TREADWAY ON RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, from press reports we learn that there is a new candidate for President on the Republican ticket, Mr. Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern, who has been referred to as the fashion plate of the Power Trust.

It is not surprising to find that the utilities now demand control of the Republican Party and that one of their moguls be selected as its candidate for the Presidency. It is a well-known rule of the game that he who pays the fiddler may call the tune.

Of course, if he is nominated, little will be said by the Republican press about his connection with the utilities. He will probably be heralded as a friend of the farmer—the farmers' candidate.

There is one thing about it, if he should be nominated and elected, the country would then have a President who can teach the American farmers how to water the stock and shear the sheep. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record and to insert therein certain quotations on the reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is that a free press about which the gentleman is speaking, or is it one where the New Deal has censored everything that has gone into it?

Mr. RANKIN. I am calling attention to it now in a free press, the Congressional Record.

Mr. RICH. Who wrote the article?

Mr. RANKIN. It was written by a local columnist. I suppose he is a Republican. The article appeared in the Washington Star.

Mr. FISH. It was written by David Lawrence, who is a supporter of the President.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not suppose Wendell Willkie ever supported the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to discuss certain speeches that have been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] which indicate a flexibility that would probably qualify him as a candidate for Vice President on the Willkie ticket.

That would also be a "New Deal" ticket, from a Republican standpoint, for, as I shall show as I go along, the statements made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] have not only been answered by responsible Democrats, but they have been completely answered by the leaders of his own party.

REPUBLICANS ANSWER MR. TREADWAY

In a speech in the House on April 26, 1939, Mr. TREADWAY set forth what he considered five fundamental objections to the trade-agreement program. He challenged proponents of the trade-agreements program to answer his objections without equivocation. These answers may readily be given in the words of prominent Republicans, and on yesterday he seems to have repeated that blunder.

Here are his alleged objections:

OBJECTION NO. 1. UNCONSTITUTIONAL DELEGATION OF POWER

Mr. TREADWAY listed as fundamental objection No. 1 an unconstitutional delegation of power. The Honorable William S. Culbertson, an outstanding Republican, before the Senate Committee on Finance on February 15, 1937, had the following to say regarding this phase of the Trade Agreements Act:

In the first place, I believe the law is sound from a legal point of view. Before this committee in 1921 we heard arguments against the constitutionality of the so-called flexible tariff provision. The same arguments that have been made here against this resolution were made then against the flexible tariff section. That section was enacted and finally came before the Supreme Court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for contideration of the state of the supreme court for continuous supreme court for continuous suprementations. sideration and its constitutionality was confirmed in the Hampton

In a law that involves foreign relations, as this law does, the decisions of the Court indicate that a less exact rule is required than in the case where a domestic problem is involved. That is indicated by the Curtiss-Wright decision which was recently handed down by the Supreme Court, and in quite a number of other decisions.

The Republicans themselves, in the Tariff Act of 1890 and the Tariff Act of 1897, established, so far as our commercial policy was concerned, the principle of systematic reciprocity; namely, a law in which Congress defines the principle on which reciprocity is to proceed and to develop, and then leaves it to the Executive to carry out the details.

It might be noted that Mr. Culbertson spent some 15 years on the Tariff Commission and in the Diplomatic Service of the United States, where he had an excellent opportunity to study at first hand the practices essential for realistic commercial policies. In 1937 he published a book on reciprocity, in which he claims Republican origin for the fundamentals of the trade-agreements program.

OBJECTION NO. 2. IMPORTATION OF COMPETITIVE PRODUCTS

Fundamental objection No. 2 relates to the importation of so-called "competitive" foreign products, which is supposed to be contrary to the basic principles of foreign trade. In connection with what constitutes a competitive product it should be remembered that if the extreme tariff philosophy of some of the Republicans had been adopted in the 1930 act we would have a duty on bananas, on the theory that they came into competition with apples, potatoes, onions, and other domestic articles. Fortunately, however, for the good of the country not all Republicans held such extreme and ludicrous views. The Republican witness called to answer Mr. TREADWAY on his objection No. 2 is the Honorable Frank Knox, Republican candidate for Vice President in 1936. He recently toured South America and wrote a series of articles on the possibilities of expanding trade with those countries. The following appeared as part of his article in the Chicago News, March 21, 1939:

But even if farmer opposition at home suffices to prevent any modification of regulations concerning fresh beef, this does not modification of regulations concerning fresh beef, this does not close the door to agreement. The largest single export item of Argentina is linseed. We use far more linseed oil than we produce. We could take all of Argentina's linseed and still be short about 60 percent of our needs. We could admit linseed free from duty. It would be a great aid to Argentina and would help us. We require large quantities of quebracho extract, the wood from which tanning extract is made. We could take most, if not all, of this from Argentina. We use far more hides than we produce. A modification of the tariff on hides is both feasible and desirable. We import wool from abroad. A part of our foreign supply might well come from the pampas of Argentina.

It is seen that Mr. Knox did not limit a hoped-for expansion of trade with South America to noncompetitive products. He is realistic in his views and knows that in order to obtain concessions we must give some.

In a speech at Pierre, S. Dak., January 12, 1939, Mr. Knox further said:

To sell American farm products abroad, we must buy some of what our foreign customers have to sell. You cannot always sell and never buy in foreign markets.

Mr. Knox's views are backed up by that section of the Republican press not jaundiced by a narrow partisan approach to great national problems. For example, the Star, Terre Haute, Ind., April 22, 1939, said, in part:

Thus far, events have to a large extent vindicated Secretary Hull and his policy of seeking more instead of less intercourse between nations.

OBJECTION NO. 3. COST OF PRODUCTION

Mr. Treadway's fundamental objection No. 3 was that reductions in duty were not based on the cost-of-production formula. The testimony of Robert Lincoln O'Brien, longtime Republican Chairman of the Tariff Commission, stated before the Senate Committee on Finance, May 1, 1934:

Mr. O'BRIEN. Well, the notion that you can obtain costs of production, the notion that you ought to obtain them, the notion that tariffs between countries should rest upon differences in costs of production, even if omniscience should give us the power to determine them, is all wrong. The tariff is a question of national policy; on some things you ought to have a tariff greater than the difference in the cost of production; other things, less than the difference in cost of production; difference in cost of production.

Senator Costigan. As a matter of fact, Chairman O'Brien, there are many tariffs at this time which are higher than the difference in costs of production.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Oh, yes; very much higher—higher than the selling price of the article in this country in some instances. On the other hand, there are tariffs on articles which are very much less than the differences in the cost of production. I maintain that a tariff should be a matter of national policy. What do you want to do about it? What is the best thing to do? If anyone would tell us what the exact difference in the cost of production of all the commodities in the world was hetween this country and the chief commodities in the world was between this country and the chief competing country, that difference ought not to be the tariff. To start with, it would be changing all the time. It would not last 1 month in any event.

I dislike the law very much indeed—the idea that we are to find the difference in the cost of production here and abroad and to base a tariff on it. I believe nobody, short of omniscience, could do it and stick to it for any length of time; and if we could do it, we ought not to do it.

In a letter dated August 20, 1910, to the chairman of the National Congressional Republican Committee, President Taft

The difficulty in fixing the proper tariff rates in accord with the principle stated in the Republican platform is in securing reliable evidence as to the difference between the cost of production at home and the cost of production abroad. The bias of the manufacturer seeking protection and of the importer opposing it weakens the weight of their testimony. Moreover, when we understand that the cost of production differs in one country abroad from that in another and that it changes from year to year and from month to month, we must realize that the precise difference in cost of production sought for is not capable of definite ascertainment, and that all that even the most scientific person can do in his investigation is, after consideration of many facts which he learns, to exercise his best judgment in reaching a conclusion.

It might be added that the Republicans, in enacting the Fordney-McCumber and Hawley-Smoot Acts did not stick to the cost-of-production formula. In the first place, rates of duty in the act of 1930 on several products were raised above costs obtained by the Tariff Commission through a careful and painstaking investigation. Examples: Butter, straw hats, print rollers, flaxseed, paint-brush handles. If these cost findings had not been disregarded in considering the Tariff Act of 1930, Mr. Treadway's party might be in a better face-saving position relative to the cost-of-production formula at present. Furthermore, anyone who knows anything about the Tariff Act of 1930 must know that there are hundreds of rates of duty which have no relationship to costs whatever and are far in excess of any hypothetical cost figures obtained.

OBJECTION NO. 4. THE MOST-FAVORED-NATION PRINCIPLE

Mr. Treadway listed the most-favored-nation principle as his fundamental objection No. 4. It so happens that several men high in the Republican Party have expressed themselves favorably and in convincing language on the most-favored-nation principle. For example, Chief Justice Hughes, when Secretary of State, in a letter to Senator H. C. Lodge, March 13, 1924, stated:

As we seek pledges from other foreign countries that they refrain from discrimination, we must give such pledges, as history has shown that these pledges can be made adequately only in terms of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment. We should seek simplicity and good will as a fundamental condition of international trade.

As late as 1932 the Republican platform stated:

The historic American policy known as the "most-favored-nation principle" has been our guiding program and we believe that policy to be the only one consistent with a full development of international trade, the only one suitable for a country that has as wide and diverse a commerce as America, and the most appropriate for us in view of the great variety of our industrial, agricultural, and mineral products, and traditions of our people.

Chairman O'Brien, in 1936, in attempting to persuade his party to support the trade-agreements program, stated:

This method, if properly employed, is an advantage which the flexible tariff law in itself did not possess in giving us a concession for our exports in exchange for any that we yield to the foreigner. By the application of the most-favored-nation principle we obtain from other countries all the advantages which they give to anybody in the way of access to their markets, while at the same time we accord them a similar relation to curs.

OBJECTION NO. 5. HEARINGS AND NEGOTIATIONS

Fundamental objection No. 5 related to hearings and methods of negotiating.
